U.S. Orders Fuel Curbs

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon today ordered a mandatory allocation program for home heating oil and propane in an effort to soften the impact of threatened winter shortages.

White House energy adviser, John Love, said the mandatory system of allocating propane under a priority program would become effective immediately.

Detailed regulations affecting heating oil will be placed into effect in the near future, Love said. Other administration officials said they would take effect in a week or two.

It was clear the U.S. "will experience some fuel shortages this winter and perhaps over the next few years," Love said.

In other energy news, four major U.S. oil companies have raised their wholesale gasoline prices since Friday and other firms are expected to follow suit this week.

Under the Cost of Living Council's Phase 4 guidelines released last Friday, there are no provisions to let dealers include the increases in their retail prices.

Wayne Bowlby, president of the Oregon Gasoline Dealers Association, said the increases wipe out gains made by dealers Friday.

In some cases, he said, dealers are making less profit per gallon than they were before Friday's new guidelines.

Atlantic Richfield raised its wholesale price 1½ cents a gallon Monday.

Shell Oil announced a two-tenths of a cent boost dated 12:01 a.m. Sept. 29, one minute too late for the dealers to pass it on to the consumer.

"That wasn't even subtle," a Shell station owner said. "They just waited for the CLC ruling to go into effect, then gobbled up the profit margin."

Meanwhile, talks of a nation-wide protest against the freeze on gasoline prices spread among filling-station operators in the U.S. today, with half the stations in Houston, Tex., closed Monday and more than a thousand on New York's Long Island expected to do the same in the next few days.

In Los Angeles, organizers of a mass shutdown of southern California gas stations predicted that from 65 to 90 per cent of the area's dealers will join the protest by taking an indefinite "vacation" beginning Friday.

"The basic gripe is that these men can't stay in business under the controls that presently exist under Phase IV," said Stanley Arnold, attorney for the Gasoline Retailers Association of Southern California.

B.C. Fed Blasts New Labor Code

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

An entirely new structure for the labor-management process in British Columbia, including establishment of an all-powerful new Labor Relations Board, is contained in legislation introduced Monday by Labor Minister Bill King.

King said this morning his target date for proclamation of Bill 11 is Jan. 1, 1974 at the latest, at which time all sections will be proclaimed.

The legislation repeals the former Trade Unions Act, the Mediation Services Act and the Labor Relations Act and sets up the new Labor Relations Board as a "labor court," with exclusive jurisdiction over almost all aspects of labor-management relations.

The new board, a 10-man body composed of a chairman, three vice-chairmen and three representatives each from labor and management, is to have powers never before bestowed on any single agency in the B.C. industrial relations process.

There is no provision for appeal of the board's decisions and actions except to a new provincial labor ombudsman, who has power to recommend.

The basic framework in which labor-management negotiations take place in B.C. remains substantially unchanged. There are, however, a number of significant changes to some principal concepts under which trade unions and employers operate.

These include provision of an exemption clause in union contracts which will allow individuals to opt out of unions on religious grounds but still pay dues to the union.

There is also some restricting of picketing practices but a struck union's competitors may now be picketed and more "informational" picketing will be allowed.

Under the new legislation, which is called the Labor Code of British Columbia Act (Bill 11), a certification vote is to be held among a group of employees if requested by 35 per cent of the employees. Fifty per cent plus one of the employees must vote for certification before a bargaining unit is established. Previously, a majority was needed just to stage a vote.

Bill 11 empowers the minister of labor to impose a binding collective agreement on any union or employer which refuses to bargain in good faith. The agreement can be put into effect for as long as a year.

Bargaining between established bargaining units and employers must start no later than 60 days prior to the expiry of the agreement in force between the two parties, and can commence as early as four months prior to expiry if either side wishes.

Injunctions obtained from courts of law to stop illegal strike action and picketing will in future be obtainable only from the Labor Relations Board itself.

All contracts will be required to contain provisions guaranteeing employee secu-

LAW PROFESSOR TO HEAD BOARD

Paul Weiler, a 34-year-old professor at Osgoode Hall Law School in Toronto, has been appointed to a five-year term as chairman of the new Labor Relations Board.

The appointment was approved by the cabinet this morning and announced by Labor Minister Bill King, who described Weiler as having "a wealth of experience in labor affairs."

The law professor, who will receive $39,000 a year as chairman of the board, has chaired more than 200 arbitrations both for the province of Ontario and a number of private companies.

Ed Peck, president of the Towboat Industrial Relations Association, will be chief administrative officer of the board as vice-chairman. His salary will be $38,000.

King said Peck, a 49-year-old native Victorian, "has a background of 20 years' experience in industrial and labor relations in the province, in both public and private industry, and federal and provincial jurisdictions."

Formerly manager of labor relations for B.C. Hydro, Peck has acted as a mediator in private disputes and as a government-appointed conciliator.

Two other vice-chairmen, who will receive $33,000 a year for their five-year terms, are Jack Moore, former regional president of the Inter-

HIGHLIGHTS

The new Labor Code of British Columbia Act (Bill 11), introduced in the legislature Monday features:

New Labor Relations Board established, with extremely wide discretionary powers covering all major areas of labor-management relations.

Negotiations for new agreement must start at least 60 days prior to expiry of old contract.

Only 35 per cent approval of employee group (down from 50 plus one) needed to stage certification vote.

All contracts must have "technological change" provisions.

Exemptions from unions on religious grounds will be allowed.

Labor board empowered to impose first collective agreement on employer or union refusing to bargain in good faith.

Provincial labor ombudsman established to handle complaints from employers and unions as well as individuals.

Powers of arbitration boards increased and boards made less accountable to courts.

Informational picketing allowed at any time, but other picketing somewhat restricted.

Picketing of competitors of struck employer allowed if competitor gains from work stoppage.

Employers are forbidden to "use, or authorize or permit the use of" professional strikebreakers.

Wipes out a controversial section of the current Labor Relations Act which made it illegal for unions to contribute money for political parties or candidates.

Makes null and void any contract which discriminates against any person contrary to the Human Rights Act. This will wipe out any union contract with discriminatory pay rates as between men and women.

Trade union leaders were more dissatisfied than anyone today with the proposed B.C. labor code and warned unless it is changed it "will cause increased labor unrest."

A preliminary analysis prepared by the B.C. Federation of Labor and parent Canadian Labor Congress described a number of provisions as "detrimental to the working people" in the province.

The unionists said at a press conference in Vancouver the New Democratic Party government they helped elect "has departed drastically" from NDP policies in its 1972 election platform.

According to Ray Haynes, federation secretary-treasurer, the unionists will now start working with "people in the NDP who are close enough to labor" to get the code overhauled.

On the employers' side, leaders in the construction industry were also highly critical but employers generally were maintaining a cool reaction.

Charles Connaghan, president of Construction Labor Relations Association, said the code will create "nothing but chaos" in his industry and described it as "gigantic step backwards."

But William Hamilton, president of the Employers' Council of B.C., of which CLRA is a member, told another press conference employers generally will take a positive approach to the legislation.

Hamilton said employers have reservations about some sections and are completely opposed to others, but will make representations for changes with the view that, if the legislation can be used to minimize strikes and lockouts, "we will be happy."

The federation objected to the government appointing none of the people it had recommended for executive positions in the labor setup.

"The majority of these positions will be filled by people with no background in the trade union movement, nor any record of assisting the aspirations of working people," said their preliminary analysis.

"So the government is proposing to place the fate of working people in the hands of a (labor relations) board dominated by professional people and employer representatives."

Unless there are substantial amendments, the trade union leaders recommended the proposed code be referred to the legislature's standing committee on labor "to enable the labor movement to make clear the potentially-disastrous implications of many sections."

Haynes was chief spokesman at the labor press conference, flanked by federation vice-president Len Guy of the Typographical Union, Mike Parr of the Operating Engineers and William Stewart of the Marine-Boilermakers.

The union leaders criticized provisions to assist the organizing of the unorganized on grounds they still will omit fishermen, agricultural workers and licensed professionals from union certification, make organizational

Nixon 'Backed' Ellsberg Raid

Times News Services

LOS ANGELES — President Nixon "specificially approved" a venture to the west coast by Howard Hunt and Gordon Liddy to develop information on Daniel Ellsberg and the Pentagon Papers leak according to former White House domestic chief John Ehrlichman.

He did not, however, say that the president authorized the burgling of the office of Ellsberg's analyst.

Ehrlichman testified last June before the Los Angeles County grand jury, which last month returned an indictment charging him with perjury and conspiracy in connection with the break-in at the psychiatrist's Beverly Hills office. That testimony, along with that of more than two dozen other witnesses, was made public Monday.

While the 727-page transcript revealed nothing dramatically new, it did shed some light on the role of the so-called "plumbers unit," the secret White House investigative team created by Nixon in the summer of 1971, and its relationship with the president.

Ehrlichman was asked: "Did you approve that recommendation to investigate Ellsberg?"

"I believe the recommendation was discussed specifically with the president, before it was approved."

"By you?"

"No, I — as I say, I believe he — he specifically approved it. And it's my recollection that he either discussed it with — well, I know he discussed it with Mr. Hoover."

"What was your understanding," the questioning continued, "of the investigative methods to be used by Mr. Hunt and Liddy during the course of their investigations?"

"Only that they were to conduct themselves in such a fashion that it did not apper that the White House was directly involved in the act of investigation."

Defeated General Jailed

SAIGON (Reuter) — The Saigon military court for the first time has passed sentence on a general for a military defeat.

The court sentenced Brig-Gen. Yu Van Giai today to five years hard labor for his part in the fall of Quang Tri in May last year. He was also stripped of his rank and 30 medals.

The court, comprised of a civilian president and four generals, found him guilty of abandoning his post in the face of the enemy and of disobeying the orders of his superiors.

Gen. Giai, 39, commanded the South Vietnamese force which captured Tchepone in Laos in the first ground strike at the Ho Chi Minh trail network in 1971.

He was then generally considered the most aggressive of South Vietnam's young battlefield commanders and was promoted to command the newly formed Third Division which was decimated at Quang Tri in last year's offensive.

NEW BEEF SPIRAL FEARED

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A continent-wide beef shortage this winter will send prices soaring, possibly even beyond the peak levels of August, warns Bruce Whyte, general manager of the British Columbia Livestock Producers Co-operative Association.

Market uncertainties, and the high costs of raising beef have resulted in reduced production and the industry is not expanding to meet growing demands, Whyte said Monday.

"At the present level of return," many beef producers and finishing operations consider expansion a bad investment," he said.

The Rum-Runners Were Mounties

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (UPI) — A number of Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers have been found guilty of smuggling liquor to Newfoundland from the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Chief Superintendent K. B. M. Fraser said the men were found guilty by a "tribunal of RCMP officers" of offences under the customs act.

U.K. Retreats In Cod War

LONDON (AP) — Britain ordered its naval shield of three frigates and three tugs out of Iceland's disputed 50-mile fishing zone today.

The move was disclosed after Prime Minister Heath told the Icelandic government in a note that the Britishewarships and tugs would be out of the disputed area by Wednesday.

"The withdrawal will be made on the assumption that the Icelandic authorities will not take any measures against British trawlers fishing, or which have fished, in the disputed area," Heath told Icelandic Prime Minister Olafur Joahannesson.

"The navy and the tugs will return if this assumption proves to be wrong."

Heath at the same time invited Johannesson to London for talks on achieving a live-and-let-live arrangement in the zone.

Iceland extended its limits to 50 from 12 miles 13 months ago and met British and other international protests.

Heath sent his letter about 12 hours before the expiry of Iceland's ultimatum to this country demanding a pull-out of the naval shield by midnight Tuesday night.

Otherwise, Iceland warned, diplomatic relations between the two fellow members of NATO would be broken.

Heath told Johannessen he trusted that the Reykjavik government, in the light of the British decision, will maintain its diplomatic ties.

LIFE TERM FOR HEROIN

TORONTO (CP) — Ng Yuen Hing, a 37-year-old cook from New York City, was sentenced Monday to life imprisonment for trafficking in 25 pounds of heroin worth $4 million on the illegal market.

Federal prosecutor David Scott, who had called for a life sentence, said he did so because Ng was not an addict but dealt in drugs solely for the money.

Ottawa Backs B.C. Gas Policy

Federal Energy Minister Donald Macdonald says he agrees in principle with the British Columbia government that prices for natural gas should be greatly increased.

He said a recommendation by the British Columbia Energy Commission that prices be raised from 32 cents per thousand cubic feet to 58 cents is similar to federal policy.

"Prices for export should be increased and indeed that was the substance of the government's change in the National Energy Board regulations back in 1970, so I have no argument on it," he said in an interview in Victoria.

The federal energy minister said natural gas should only be exported at prices similar to other forms of energy.

The federal minister said it was clearly within provincial jurisdiction to establish a Crown agency to control gas production at the wellhead and to direct Westcoast Transmission Company to become a common carrier.

In Vancouver, Robert Kadiec, president of Inland Natural Gas, said the predicted natural gas shortage could have disastrous consequences for industries in the B.C. interior this winter.

He said the shortage could result in lay-offs at some plants.

"The reaction voiced by some of our customers has so far ranged from 'serious' to 'disastrous'," Kadiec said.

"Our customers are all extremely vulnerable to the shortage because, as Interior operations, they have no access to alternate fuels," Kadiec said.

Cowichan Fishing Allowed

Environment Minister Jack Davis said from Vancouver today he has reached a tentative understanding with the Cowichan Band council allowing them up to 5,000 salmon from the Cowichan River runs.

Davis met the council and other Indian representatives in Duncan Monday night and he said today he sees the main accomplishment as agreement on the principle of escapement — assuring enough salmon reach spawning beds to assure future runs.

If taking of salmon from the river by Indians is judged to be threatening escapement of any species, the band will have the alternative of making up the needed quota from the commercial fishery, such as through hiring a seiner.

Davis said the meeting did not deal in detail with means of harvesting fish from the river.

Both Sides Rap Changes

picketing still illegal, and ignore proposed tightening up of restrictions on "company unions."

They objected to the "sweeping powers" to be granted the new 10-member labor board, making the powers of the now defunct B.C. Mediation Commission "pale in comparison."

"It is very fair legislation," said Fred (Whitey) Severson, past president of the Victoria City Firefighters Union and second vice-president of the union's B.C. association.

He said it is the type of legislation he had been hoping for and arbitration for essential services, particularly firefighters, "has been the fairest way to settle a dispute."

"I think it will be received very happily by the B.C. body," he said.

Mrs. Catherine Farrar, executive director of Health Sciences Association of B.C., representing para-medical personnel, said she is "extremely pleased" with the proposed legislation.

"We feel the strike weapon is not a realistic dispute-settling tool in hospitals," she said, adding that her union has a no-strike provision in its constitution.

She also welcomed the new code establishing that supervisory personnel are within a trade union bargaining unit because "there is a definite need for their protection."

A spokesman for the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. said it was difficult to comment without seeing the bill, but observed that the association voluntarily went before the B.C. Mediation Commission two years ago "but we have stood by the right-to-strike principle. What will happen in the future I can't say."

Duncan Bradford, executive secretary of the B.C. Hospitals Association, which bargains on behalf of hospitals, said while he hasn't studied the bill "I'm hopeful some good will come of it."

The bill appeared to be trying to offer a way for employees in essential industries to steer clear of strikes "and this is a good approach."

He was concerned that management doesn't have the same opportunity of choosing voluntary, arbitration as the unions do.

A spokesman for the Hospital Employees Union said there is no response yet from the union to the bill.

Initial reaction from opposition spokesmen to the new labor code was generally critical.

Liberal leader David Anderson said a clause allowing a person with strong religious beliefs not to join a union was a "phony concession" because that person would still be required to pay dues.

That person, he said, is placed in the position of having to support an institution he opposes.

The removal of a court's right to issue injunctions, Anderson added, was simply the transfer of powers and the creation of a "labor court."

And giving the 10-man board the right to draw up a first contract on behalf of certified union workers who can't reach a collective agreement with management, opened up a "minefield of problems," he said.

"It would involve the wisdom of Solomon."

Acting Conservative leader Dr. G. Scott Wallace was most pessimistic about the legislation which he described as "not only one of the most complex but also one of the most important bills to be introduced in the four years I've been in provincial politics."

"On this rides the whole fate of labor relations in the province."

Wallace's key concern was the sweeping power that would be granted to the labor relations board, and the apparent lack of appeal mechanisms from its decisions.

He questioned the constitutionality of such a strong, publicly-appointed group taking over the judicial function of issuing injunctions.

"As a layman, the thought that runs through my mind is, do we have protection if a government chooses to give that much power to a board of appointed people?"

Wallace predicted the board would be buried under the sheer volume of work it would have to cope with under the new code.

Jim Chabot, Social Credit house leader, shared Anderson's views on the religious belief clause, but said there are no more than 500 people in B.C. who have conscientious objections to trade unions.

Chabot singled out the clause allowing unions, under certain conditions, to bargain for employees of independent contractors as his main worry. He said this will most affect contractors in the logging industry.

"It appears clear to me that the day of the independent logger contractor will disappear in the not-too-distant future."

The Social Credit member said further that if unions in essential services (firemen, police and hospitals) can turn to binding arbitration to solve contract problems, "employers should have an equal right."

New Labor Board Has Wide Range

rity with regard to technological changes. If contracts do not provide such guarantees, the minister of labor can impose them.

King, at a press conference shortly after Bill 11 was introduced, said his three-man advisory committee had studied labor legislation used by Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and the federal government. The new Labor Relations Board is similar to that in Ontario, he said.

King said the main thrust of the legislation is to provide the new board with jurisdiction to "get at the causes of disputes rather than deal with them in just a punitive way, as the courts have done in the past."

To accomplish this, almost all access to the legal process has been eliminated from labor-management relations.

One section stipulates that the Labor Relations Board is to have "exclusive jurisdiction to determine the extent of its jurisdiction . . . or to determine any fact or question of law that is necessary to establish its jurisdiction."

Another specifies that any decision, order or ruling of the board is "final and conclusive and is not open to question or review in any court . . ."

The only appeal of board decisions is to the board itself.

The legislation provides for the appointment by the cabinet of a labor ombudsman for a term of five years, but the ombudsman, although having power to investigate any complaint raised against the board, an employer, union or labor department employee, is not able to enforce his recommendations only to report them to the labor minister, legislature or public.

The regulation of all strikes, lockouts and picket activities is to be taken over by the Labor Relations Board, which can decide whether or not such activities are damaging any individual or group or should be stopped by order.

The present requirement of 72 hours' strike and lockout notice remains in the new legislation as do penalties for failing to comply with the act, which are fines of $1,000 for individuals and $10,000 for employers or unions.

A significant refinement of existing legislation moves the burden of proof of an unfair labor practice from the employee to the employer.

This means that it will now be up to individual employer to prove to the Labor Relations Board that he had good cause to discharge, suspend, transfer, lay off or otherwise discipline an employee if the employee lodges a complaint with the board.

The definition of unfair labor practices is so considerably expanded in the new legislation, including stipulation that professional strike-breakers and groups of strike-breakers cannot be used by employers.

Another important innovation in Bill 11 is the provision of a new method which the Labor Relations Board and labor minister can use to avert strike action and work stoppages before contracts expire.

This would be through the newly-created position of "special officers" who will have the power to arbitrate disputes themselves and impose binding orders on parties in a dispute.

There is provision in the legislation for certain workers in essential services, including policemen, firefighters and hospital workers, to choose binding arbitration as a means of settling a contract dispute, regardless of the wishes of their management group.

King said this provision is a realistic alternative to strike action, which remains available to these workers if they choose to use it.

King also said individuals will not be able to sue for civil damages suffered as a result of picketing or strike action unlessall channels of appeal to the Labor Relations Board are exhausted.

Similarly, picketers operating within the law cannot be sued for restricting access to an individual's property or for interfering with "contractural relations."

Informational picketing is to be allowed by Bill 11 at any time by any union.

However, there is to be a restriction on the type of picketing a union may do in an attempt to gain support for its strike actions.

Picketing will not be allowed at a place where a collective agreement is in effect and the board prohibits it. But picketing will be allowed at the place of business of those employers considered "allies" of the struck employer.

The bill defines "allies" as those persons who stand to gain in business as a result of a strike or lockout and who perform work, supply goods or furnish services of a kind that would normally be done by the employer, unless he is able to prove the contrary.

The section specifying that every collective agreement signed in the province must contain provisions for arbitration of disputes arising from technological changes brought in by the employer says these provisions may include notice by an employer of intention to introduce technological changes, opportunities for retraining or transfer of employees and severance pay for employees displaced by the technological change.

If an arbitration board is called in to arbitrate a dispute arising from a technological change, the arbitration board may order a delay of up to 90 days for the change or reinstatement and compensation to any employee displaced by the change.

The religious exemption clause contained in Bill 11 is a type of Rand Formula provision for religious purposes. It stipulates that persons who are able to convince the Labor Relations Board that they should not have to belong to a labor union for religious reasons will pay the union the equivalent of dues but will not take part in any union business.

This is the type of conscience clause widely expected to be introduced and one to which the labor movement has already expressed its opposition, saying it will lead to an erosion of the unions' posision in employee representation.

The Labor Relations Board is to be appointed by order-in-council. The chairman, however, cannot be removed from his position, during the five years of his term of appointment, except by an act passed by the legislature.

The board will be able to use a system of panels, several of which will be able to make decisions on different matters simultaneously. A panel is to consist of, in some cases, the chairman or one of the vice-chairmen only, and in other cases a vice-chairman along with an equal number of labor and management appointees.

An example of the wide powers granted the board under Bill 11 is a section which stipulates that the board has exclusive jurisdiction over "communication of information or opinion in a labor dispute by speech, writing or any other means of communication" which could conceivably include statements of libel and slander.

Under the legislation, the powers of boards of arbitration are increased and control by the courts over their decisions is restricted.

And again, the powers of the Labor Relations Board are increased, to the extent that in the event the board decides that a delay has occurred in the settling of a difference between two sides in a dispute, it may order that the difference be arbitrated by a board or a special officer.

When an application for certification of a group of employees is being processed, no strikes or lockouts affecting the employees will be allowed and the employer will not be able to increase or decrease rates of pay or change working conditions.

Another power of the new board will be to order the consolidation of several unions into a joint council if it considers this "necessary or advisable" or when one or more unions applies for such consolidation.

King said all the appointments are effective immediately.

They are officially the old Labor Relations Board he said, so that the four can begin organizational work for the new board before it is established when the act is proclaimed.

King said he hopes the proclamation will be made by the beginning of next year.

Six other board members, three to be nominated by labor groups in the province and three by employer representatives, have not been appointed yet.

Sandringham Pact Forecast

The three-year Sandringham private hospital strike could be nearing an end, now that the government's new labor legislation has been unveiled.

Under the Labor Code of B.C. Act (Bill 11), the minister of labor has the power to impose a first collective agreement on an employer or union which he considers to have not bargained in good faith.

In the Sandringham case, the hospital management has already been found by the Labor Relations Board not to have bargained in good faith with the female employees who have been seeking a first collective agreement after being certified three years ago.

Under Bill 11, if a union and employer have not been able to conclude a first collective agreement, the labor minister may, at the request of either party or after an investigation of his own, direct the powerful new Labor Relations Board to inquire into the dispute, and if advisable, "settle the terms and conditions for the just collective agreement."

These terms and conditions are binding on the employer and the union, and can be made effective for not longer than one year, after which time the union and employer would be into a normal negotiating pattern, with each side being governed in its actions by the province's labor laws.

Section 7 of Bill 11 specified that when the board is settling the terms and conditions for a first collective agreement, it shall give both parties an opportunity to present evidence and make representations.

The board is also to take into account the extent to which the parties have, or have not, bargained in good faith in an effort to conclude a first collective agreement along with the terms and conditions enjoyed by employees doing similar jobs for other employers.

$2,000 POSTED OVER DEATH

Saanich Board of Police Commissioners has offered a $1,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for the death of Scott Emanuel Cooper, Mayor Hugh Curtis said today.

An additional $1,000 reward has been offered by Cooper's relatives, said Curtis.

Cooper, 20, of 7436 West Saanich, was hitch-hiking home in the early morning of June 9. Shortly after 3 a.m. he was picked up on Douglas Street and driven to the intersection of West Saanich and Elk Lake Drive where he was dropped off about 3:15 a.m.

Fifteen minutes later he was found lying unconscious at West Saanich and Wilkinson.

He died in Victoria General Hospital July 19, said Curtis.

"We don't frequently employ the reward method," said the mayor, adding Cooper's death was "particularly distressing . . . all leads have been throughly explored and exhausted."

"We feel that there is someone in the municipality of the city of Victoria who knows something about it," said Police Chief Bob Peterson. "Indeed, it is one of the mysterious deaths in Saanich."

Cooper's death was likely an accident, said Peterson, and foul play is not suspected.

GRAIN COSTS MAY BOOST BEER PRICE

TORONTO (CP) — Higher prices for farm products may result in a rise in the price of beer, Canadian Breweries Ltd. says in its annual report to shareholders.

B.C. beer prices were increased by 15 cents a case of 12 Monday. High prices for the grain used to make beer, combined with tough competition and United States controls, have put brewers in a cost-price squeeze, said the Toronto-based firm which has extensive sales in Canada, the U.S. and overseas.

When your oven is instant, you can get back to enjoying food that isn't.

Who knows what preservatives and additives go into some of the new, instant, foods we use these days for the sake of speed and convenience?

With a Toshiba Electronic Oven, you have time for good old-fashioned food again.

With a Toshiba Oven you can cook a real meal in minutes. You can scramble eggs (1 minute), and cook bacon (4 slices, 2 minutes), and be sitting down, eating, in the time it would take a fry pan to heat up. A five pound roast that used to keep a hungry family waiting for two hours? Thirty minutes in a Toshiba.

It's ideal for entertaining, too. You can cook food in it ahead of time, refrigerate, and reheat in minutes, just before you want to serve, with all the natural goodness, flavour and colour retained.

Think. No messy pots and pans to wash after dinner. No scouring the inside of your oven, either. All a cool-cooking Toshiba oven ever needs is a quick wipe with a damp cloth every once in a while.

Toshiba's electronic microwave oven is both compact and portable. It's safe, cool, clean, easy to operate and install. Plug it into any 110-120 volt grounded outlet anywhere, kitchen, family room, patio, cottage, boat.

If it's your oven, see your Toshiba dealer.

Sickness and Cure

Terrorism by small groups of desperate men and women appears to be increasing. It is a phenomenon of our era that the skyjacking that began in the efforts of political fugitives to escape from the United States to Cuba has evolved into a much more complex operation.

The second phase was the kidnapping of planeloads of innocent travellers who were hostages for the skyjacker's demand for money and a flight to safety. Then came efforts to flee with hostages kidnapped on the ground, as the Munich Arab desperados tried to capture the Jewish Olympic athletes. Later came threatened individual or mass deaths to bolster demands for the freeing of convicted prisoners.

In the developing trends in this field, Arab terrorists of one type or another have played a leading part. Now the latest peak has been reached with the capitulation of the Austrian government to two Arab extremists, with the promise to discontinue organized aid to Jewish emigrants travelling from Russia to Israel.

It is the first time that a sovereign government's policy has been altered by a couple of bandits wielding guns and grenades, and Austrian Chancellor Kreisky is coming in for strong criticism. Where will such a trend lead? Will more governments be coerced into modifying their national policies — lowering a tariff, trading with a specified country, dismissing a leader, altering a treaty or an agreement with some other nations — when a handful of reckless hoodlums seize innocent persons and threaten their lives?

The problem of terrorism is clearly a global one and the nations of the world have delayed dangerously long in uniting to wipe it out. Individual governments can hardly be blamed for placing humanitarianism first when confronted by an agonizing decision between hazarding the lives of one or more persons and knuckling under to the demands of bandits. The alternative, a drastic refusal to listen to any demands, would eventually make modern kidnapping a useless enterprise — but the interim costs could be tragic, and officials who instigated a tough policy could be the targets of terrible condemnation.

The Israelis have been fairly successful in such a stand, but their opponents have been Arabs against whom they are waging an undeclared war in any case and sterner measures have been practicable. But if the Austrian chancellor — himself of Jewish origin — had sacrificed the lives of the hostages in order to frustrate the kidnappers, he would have been liable to severe criticism from the race which he was trying to help.

The conditions imposed by the Vienna bandits may be circumvented by some arrangement other than the existing system of a transit camp for Jews. In any case, there could be little blame attached to any government that refused to honor a concession obtained under such duress.

But much of the remedy for these terrorist activities obviously lies in the countries to which the culprits flee. If there were a worldwide pact among all nations that no country would receive such fugitives, and that where the rule was broken stern group measures would be taken against the erring government, then pressure through terrorism would become unprofitable, if not impossible.

As long as there are successes, there will be repetitions, and the scope and seriousness of the occurrences will increase. The countries which now are aiding terrorism by providing even temporary havens for its practitioners are in effect in league with the ruthless lawbreakers and should be treated accordingly by the potential nation-victims — which could be any country on earth.

An Office Is Not a Home

On November 29, 1971, in the House of Commons Prime Minister Trudeau said of the Canada Development Corporation that "the government has made known to the board of directors its wish to see the location of the head office moved to Vancouver within two years."

On July 24, 1973, at the Calgary Western Economic Opportunities conference Mr. Trudeau added, ". . . a century after the old national policy, we can now together begin shaping a new national policy, a policy to strengthen Canada by achieving more balanced and diversified regional growth throughout the country."

On September 25, 1973, in Vancouver, CDC President Anthony Hampson said of the corporation, ". . . we don't think of any one place as a permanent office."

Mr. Hampson made the remark in announcing that the pro forma head office of the CDC would be located in Vancouver, but none of the corporation's top executives will be based in the western city permanently. They will commute between Vancouver and Toronto where there will be another office. The CDC's president admitted that much of his time during the next year will be spent in Toronto to facilitate a public stock issue.

When the president of the corporation is going to spend most of his time in Toronto and when the chief officers of the company are going to commute between Vancouver and Toronto, how can the CDC call Vancouver head office? To say that Vancouver will be the head office of the CDC is like saying that Panama or Liberia has the largest merchant marine fleet in the world. It makes one think. Who issues the orders in this country, the prime minister of Canada or the president of the CDC?

Speeches Versus Policies

OTTAWA — The quarterly report of the Food Prices Review Board is a particularly interesting example of the "monitoring" technique, relied on by the government as an essential weapon in the fight against inflation.

There is nothing in the report which is likely to be of direct assistance to the housewife on her shopping errands. It may be true that the price tags on certain products reflect the erratic behavior of the Peruvian current but such information will certainly not slow the remorseless whirring of the cash registers in the supermarkets.

Monitoring, nevertheless, is considered to have value. It is presumably of psychological importance. It conveys an impression that a form of control is being exercised since highly placed persons are keeping vigilant watch on the behavior of prices.

Reassuring Glance

Beryl Plumptre and her associates have done their best to reinforce this impression. They have brought together statistics on prices, they have analyzed various movements and attempted to explain them; they have taken hopeful note of advancing incomes and new government subsidies. They have also ventured a cautious but reassuring glance into the near future and announced a finding:

"It is the Board's view that food prices in Canada are not rocketing out of control."

If the expectation of higher prices has encouraged anti-social activity, such as the purchase of freezers (roundly condemned by Eugene Whelan, the Minister of Agriculture), it is arguable that Mrs. Plumptre's glad and official tidings may have marginally beneficial results.

At the same time the Board's choice of language is somewhat unusual. While the term "rocketing" may indeed, be found in the body of the report, the context is disquieting. It occurs in a quotation from an FAO report dated Sept. 16, 1973, which reads as follows:

"The world food situation in 1973 is more difficult than at any time since the years immediately following the devastation of the Second World War. As a result of droughts and other unfavorable weather conditions, poor harvests were unusually widespread in 1972. Cereal stocks have dropped to the lowest level for 20 years. In the new situation of world-wide shortage, changes are occurring with extraordinary rapidity. Prices are rocketing, and the world's biggest agricultural exporter, the United States has had to introduce export allocations for certain products."

It is also to be noted that the report contains a good deal of information about costs which may not yet have been fully reflected in prices; increases, for example, in personal disposable income, in government transfer payments to persons and in farm costs inputs.

There is a question to be asked about monitoring of this character. What would have been the effect on prices if the Board had been in operation throughout 1973 and had been assisting us at quarterly intervals with reviews distinguished, as this one is, by the forward look?

"The report summarizes what actually happened in 1973. This backward look is an interesting guide to what the forward look might have been in January, or April, or June. Thus we read:

"The year 1973 has seen the sharpest rise in food prices in more than two decades. Increases this year have exceeded by far those registered in the middle and late 1960s. In the first eight months of 1973 retail food prices averaged 13.3 per cent higher than in the corresponding period in 1972. In August, the latest month for which the Statistics Canada Consumer Price Index is available, the increase from a year earlier was 15.8 per cent. Both figures are well above the average increase of 7.6 per cent registered in 1972. In the United States, a similar pattern of food price escalation has been recorded.

Candid Forecasts

In the face of these prospects, it is only reasonable to assume that candid forecasts by the Board would have intensified panic buying. The stampede to department stores would have sent the price of freezers rocketing into the stratosphere.

It is true that such reports would have had educational value. Fortunately consumers were spared the education.

If the present report is of value, it is because the Board, after the summer price surge and more recent fluctuations, is now able to say that "many of the circumstances of soaring prices have been arrested."

It is to be hoped that this finding is correct, for the future credibility of the Board will obviously depend on the accuracy of its present forecasts.

Glad and Official Tidings

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — If the United Nations does nothing else for the statesmen of the world, it manages somehow to make them pay attention to their hopes and ideals. They don't really believe in the U.N. as an effective instrument for keeping the peace, but they defend its principles in theory even when they defy them in practice.

This is what Henry Kissinger did in his first major speech as Secretary of State before the U.N. General Assembly. He came here with the reputation as a negotiator between the major powers, as a believer in peace through negotiation among the giants, as a cynic and even Spenglerian pessimist about the capacity of men and nations to organize for the common good.

Yet he surfaced, almost as a Utopian, arguing not for a league of dominant nations but for a league of minds, not for the spirit of domination by the giants, but for a "world community" based on common purposes.

Sense of Justice

"The United States," he said, "will never be satisfied with a world of uneasy truces, of offsetting blocs, of accommodations of convenience. We know that power can enforce a resigned passivity, but only a sense of justice can enlist consensus.

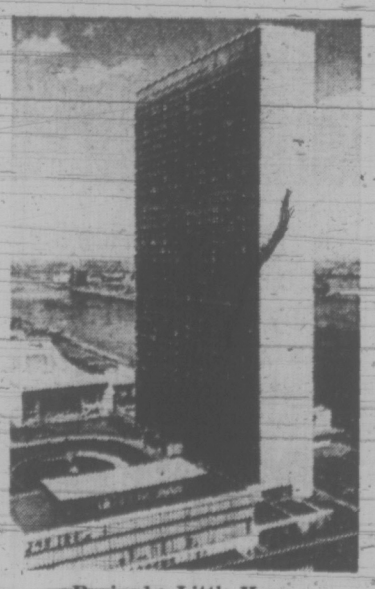
"We strive for a peace whose stability rests not merely on a balance of forces but on shared aspirations. We are convinced that a structure which ignores humane values will prove cold and empty and unfulfilling to most of mankind."

It would be easy to demonstrate that Kissinger's speech was not a very accurate representation of many of Nixon's policies or even of his own diplomatic tactics abroad or his power politics in Washington.

This was Kissinger of Harvard, the scholar and philosopher speaking. It was a "maiden speech" in the House of Commons manner. He is not only a good negotiator but a good politician and actor. He was speaking to a new constituency in a new role, and he chose to talk about his hopes and doubts.

He was for the day Emerson's "scholar in action," posing the ancient human dilemma between optimism and pessimism, with a little bit of Adlai Stevenson's eloquence and a lot of Spenglerian gloom. But he didn't talk much about the realities of his problem in Washington.

For the mood in Washington is not noble, generous, or international, but parochial, grudging, narrowly vindictive, and highly nationalistic. Secretary Kissinger talked about the necessity of creating a "world community," of "our policy of partnership in the Western Hemisphere," of promoting conciliation in Europe," of assuring that all the people of the world are adequately fed, and of the dangers of a world "divided between the permanently rich and the permanently poor."



Revived a Little Hope

But the fact is that back in Washington Kissinger is deeply worried about a Congress that thinks the cold war is over, that believes it can pressure Moscow to liberate the Jews and be generous to its intellectual dissidents, that resents the commercial competition of the new Europe and Japan, and still thinks it has the power to make the world shape up.

"Are we prepared," Secretary Kissinger asked the U.N., "to accept and infuse our labors with a new spirit? Shall we proceed with one-sided demands and sterile confrontations? Or shall we proceed in a spirit of compromise produced by a sense of common destiny?"

This is a speech that might usefully have been made by Kissinger in the cabinet Room of the White House, and yet it would probably be wrong to call this hypocrisy. Kissinger talked to the U.N. in the idealistic way Wilson, Roosevelt, Stimson, Monnet and even Churchill talked about the ideal world from time to time.

They were all unfaithful to the ideal from time to time, and usually put their national interests ahead of everything else, but also they dreamed of a world beyond their time, when nations would really be united, and in critical moments when they had to make speeches like Kissinger's at the U.N., they defended the ideal of the coming age.

The new Secretary of State has his troubles now. In his efforts to reach an accommodation with Moscow, he is caught between his old adversaries on the right, who want no compromise with the Communists, and his former academic allies who think he has the power to compel Brezhnev to free all the Soviet Jews and be decent to all the Soviet dissidents.

Dealing With Realities

After his speech, Kissinger had to deal with the realities. He had to tell the Soviets that Scoop Jackson had the votes in the Senate to deny them "most favored nation" privileges while the controversy over the Soviet Jews and dissident intellectuals went on. He spent his time here in New York with the Africans who wanted the food and equality he talked about, and the Latin Americans who wondered whatever happened to that hemisphere "partnership" he applauded.

So already Kissinger knows the difference between being a protected adviser to Nixon in the White House, dealing with one question at a time, and being Secretary of State, where he has to speak and then be available to explain the difference between his speeches and his policies.

Nevertheless, he made a good beginning. He revived a little hope around the U.N. that maybe the U.S. was going to think and talk about its ideals again, even if it couldn't achieve them, and at this headquarters of this dispirited world organization, this is regarded as a hopeful sign.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Propane

Congratulations to the people and organizations of B.C. who moved so quickly to clean up Vancouver's oil spill. Their action indicates that people are willing to do something about large scale pollution.

I wonder if each of us is willing to combat our individual pollution in its most insidious form — the gasoline-powered automobile? Surely, if we are responsible, concerned individuals, we will refuse to drive cars with a larger than necessary body or engine. Perhaps also we would be disciplined enough to limit ourselves to one vehicle per family. It seems strange, considering the fact that 250,000 vehicles (forklifts, trucks, private cars, buses including all of Edmonton's) in North America are propane-powered, that neither government nor private industry has produced a propane powered auto. Propane is 70% less pollutant, cheaper and easier on engines, than gasoline.

If we were really concerned about environmental quality we would not only convert present day vehicles to propane propulsion (costs: $100 to $200) but force auto makers to make a viable propane vehicle. If we can be concerned about our oil spill, why not about our transport? — George A. Harding, 3168 Harriet Rd.

Match Point

The tennis world will remember the Riggs-King farce for a long time. Let's take another look at the whole picture of this much-publicized tennis "battle of the sexes." Any of these sports attractions in which huge sums of money are involved are well worth scrutiny. This one might well qualify as the hoax of the century.

In a previous match, Bobby Riggs defeated Margaret Court quite handily. Now Mrs. Court is considered to be the equal of Billie Jean King on the courts, or even better.

Yet Mrs. King took the first game, and Riggs was dragging behind practically the whole way, losing in three straight sets.

What happened to all those special shots and manoeuvres with which Riggs said he would confound Mrs. King? Instead, his play was featured by an unending string of first-service faults. The number of these balls which got over the net could be counted on the fingers.

At no time was there any brilliance or show of talent by Riggs such as an old pro might possess. The will to win was absent. The performance did not even look like an old college try; and the immediate request for a re-match made one skeptical and suspicious.

In the welter of interviews and yatter prior to the game, it was stated that all the arrangements had to suit Mrs. King, or else. How far did that go? The TV broadcast was not good and the announcing was lousy — a man and woman yacking no-end about the various shots, but no point-by-point scoring. Often one had to wait until the end of a game to confirm one's score tally.

It was a bit of a shocker to find that the game had already been played and was on video tape. Therefore it was not a live show.

The match could not and did not prove anything, except that Barnum was right. The public were boondoggled into paying hundreds of thousands of dollars to see a top flight woman tennis star, in the prime of life, play a "once-was" male star who is 30 years past his prime, on his assertions that he could run her ragged.

Women's Lib enthusiasts caught on the TV screen were obviously elated. Yet Riggs could still say that his score was even, one win and one loss.

I telephoned a woman who had some experience in sports and asked her opinion. She made a quick reply: "I think it was a fake." — J. Barton Creighton, 1130 Pandora Ave.

From the Times of October 2, 1913

A motor omnibus line, in which every citizen of Victoria may be a shareholder, which will charge fares varying from two to five cents a ride, and which will build its own cars in this city, is the proposal which a number of prominent businessmen of this city will endeavor to carry through. T. Edward Clark, of the Commercial Investment Company, has been appointed secretary of the infant corporation by the dozen or so men who have banded together in this enterprise, and every man who has the slightest interest in the relief of the present traffic conditions is being asked to call at his office, 307 Pemberton Street.

Socred Voice Stuck in Que.

By DOUGLAS FISHER

OTTAWA — The Liberal annual gathering generated about a hundred times as much coverage (descriptive; critical; favorable) as that given two weeks earlier to the national meeting of the fourth federal party.

Real Caouette, the Social Credit leader, said at the Winnipeg convention that the English language media ignored his party.

Gilbert Rondeau, MP, the Social Credit national organizer, made a plea to the six score or so delegates that a national party headquarters ought to be set up in Ottawa. The 15 MPs of the party would like to shuck the burden of operating the party out of their Commons offices over to such an HQ.

Not much more than those two points got public notice for Social Credit out of the Winnipeg effort.

On Rondeau's plea, this partisan operation on Parliament Hill has been a can of worms that the other parties have been very aware of, but hesitate to challenge.

To explain. Few MPs of the other parties worry about wandering over the indistinct line between parliamentary and partisan activities with regard to their constituencies. And on the burgeoned staffs of the opposition leaders, paid from parliamentary funds, there is a blur between aid to the chiefs in their House roles and the scheduling, advance work, speech-writing, etc. involved in pacing Stanfield and Lewis around the country.

That is, more and more the taxpayer is paying for the "ins" of the opposition as they carry on what cannot really be called parliamentary duties. Of course, the prime minister and the ministers have been underwritten much more substantially for a long time as partisan politicians outside the House and their ministries.

The difference between all this and the Social Credit operation is largely of scale. The Creditistes brought to the House their politicking in Quebec. Almost without exception, their MPs get elected by mass "people" support and activity.

In the minority Parliaments after 1963 Creditiste support in the House was fundamental to the survival of the Pearson government. The Liberals had no intention of losing their votes in the House as had happened to the Diefenbaker government in early 1963. Thus no one in the government raised a voice as the Creditistes really turned on the parliamentary services of printing, copying and franking. The volume of broadsides and letters to most of the ridings in Quebec (and recently far beyond Quebec) escalated. MPs of other parties have never generated so much.

This prodigious currying of the constituencies helps explain why the Creditistes didn't blow away as most pundits expected. Even in Mr. Trudeau's romp in 1968 they held onto 13 seats. Last year they picked up two more MPs from Quebec, ran second in 32 ridings there, and jacked their Quebec percentage from 16 per cent (1968) to 24 per cent. More important, the party at last got a response in Montreal, the vote percentage there going from two to eight. Seven of their second-place finishes were in Montreal.

None of the present 15 Social Credit MPs is an exceptional parliamentarian. The best the party has had was Gilles Gregoire.

He split from the caucus, became the first separatist MP, then faded out in 1968.

Real Caouette spends so much time campaigning that his House potential has never been realized. He comes in only on the odd foray. His sons, Gilles, and Andre Fortin, the young MPs from Lotbiniere, show shrewdness in the House and the results of some digging on legislative and scrutiny issues. The rest of the caucus is terribly ordinary although not lazy. In the debates and committees they are rarely briefed and well-prepared. Aside from firm view and persistence in opposing abortion and urging capital punishment their contributions are simply ignored.

At a rough estimate, 85 per cent of Social Credit House speeches have an ideological emphasis on monetary reform and what its magic will work for the poor families of Quebec. The name of Major C. H. Douglas, the originator of Social Credit theory, is more invoked in this Parliament than that of Sir John A., Sir Wilfrid Woodsworth, Marx, John Stuart Mill and Edmund Burke all together.

It is as though most of the Social Credit MPs aren't there as parliamentarians. This is a marked contrast to the indefatigible pursuit of the people going on in the 6th floor offices. There's rarely a day in the week when the Social Credit corridor hasn't its piles of bumph, waiting for despatch. Tens of thousands of green, magazine-type pamphlets were mailed to party members and sympathizers across Canada, publicizing the Winnipeg convention. Late at night and on weekends there are usually a few SC MPs or some of their young workers industriously grinding out the stuff in an otherwise silent Centre Block.

Real Caouette . . . ignored by media

Real Caouette is right when he asserts that the media in English Canada largely ignores his party and does not treat it as the national party it is trying to become. On the other hand, outside Quebec in the 1972 election, Social Credit failed to place a single candidate in a second place. It got less than 100,000 votes altogether in its two former strongholds of B.C. and Alberta.

The question Mr. Caouette must ask himself relates to the means Social Credit must use to get attention from the media. Will it come when the MPs almost always speak only in French, when they bend almost any question or debating topic either into a Quebec context (and of rural Quebec at that) or onto a pitch about Social Credit theory, no matter how inappropriate either emphasis may be? Only with the leader, on his occasional efforts, does one get the impression that Social Credit MPs speak with Canada in mind and with a knowledge of problems as they are outside Quebec.

The credibility of Social Credit speakers and policies is almost non-existent on a wide range of domestic matters from freight rates to airports to women's rights to Indian grievances to the armed forces to economic independence. In other words, except on monetary theory, they have nothing to say to English Canada.

Something New Stirring In European Politics

By BERNARD D. NOSSITER

LONDON — A serious new politics, rooted in a demand for individual expression and hostility towards centralized power, has suddenly emerged in Scandinavia and Britain.

These are the more civil regions of Europe, where citizens tend to be polite and still place a high premium on the human personality.

Since the Great Depression, their politics have followed a more or less simple model, nominal right against nominal left, a business-oriented conservative party or coalition against a party controlled by large unions. In office neither has behaved very differently from the other, promoting social benefits, high employment and the particular interests of government, corporate and union bureaucrats.

But in the last 12 months this familiar political spectrum has been flown apart. Consider these items:

NORWAY—Voters last year rejected the urgings of both big business and big unions and defeated a bid to enter the Common Market, an entity notorious for its remote, bureaucratic control. Two weeks ago, the long dominant Labor Party suffered a massive defeat as the electorate scattered all over the left and right flanks of the political landscape.

Deep Split

DENMARK — Anti-Common Market forces last year collected nearly two votes in five despite the obvious and measurable cash benefits from entry, and a strong government, union and business campaign in favor. Today, the ruling Social Democratic Party is deeply split and would probably suffer reverses in a general election.

SWEDEN — Premier Olof Palme's Social Democrats took a pasting last month and hung onto power as a minority government. The one clear winner was the Centre Party, which has doubled its strength in 10 years, crying "decentralization" and "green wave." The Centre, pulling from both the left and right, now has 90 seats, second only to Palme's 156.

BRITAIN — The Liberal Party, a spent force since World War I, is enjoying an astonishing revival. In the general elections three years ago it polled only 7.5 per cent of the votes. The latest poll shows the Liberals winning more than three times as many, an incredible 27.6 per cent, a scant one point behind Prime Minister Edward Heath's ruling Conservatives. In an election today the Liberals would clearly hold the balance of power at least. The party has just completed a heady annual conference in which it solemnly debated whether to seek this modest goal or go all-out for victory.

High Taxes

Clearly, those in power everywhere, regardless of party label, are in trouble. Clearly, something new is stirring in this part of the Atlantic world.

The new politics can best be seen in Britain and Sweden where the Liberal and Center Parties give it a voice. No such party has yet emerged in Denmark or Norway, although curious new groupings, expressing only a distaste for the high taxes of the mixed economy, are making surprising inroads into the traditional parties.

What is the shape of the new politics, of Britain's Liberals and Sweden's Center? They draw chiefly from middle class voters who are fed up with the two conventional labor and business organs. They tend to pull more from the Conservative party than its Labor counterpart, but they cut into both.

Above all, they are markedly incoherent about what they are for and very clear about what they are against. The Swedish Center, for example, talks endlessly of the need to break down centralized power but would not touch the handful of huge, industrial and financial corporations that dominate the Swedish economy. The British Liberals want to bring "power back to the people," but their leaders are staunchly on the side of continued British membership in the Common Market, the quintessence of government by remote control.

The economic programs of the "new politics" parties could not pass an elementary test in logic. The Liberals proclaim themselves the determined foe of British inflation but urge whopping cost increases through a new minimum wage and bigger social benefits. The Center promises to create 100,000 new Swedish jobs and offers not a clue how this is to be done.

If economics is not their strength, it is hardly surprising. Both Britain and Sweden are enjoying rising levels of income, output and employment — as well as skyrocketing prices — and the state of the economy cannot account for much, if any, of the newfound strength for Liberals and Center.

Their appeal evidently lies elsewhere, in the things they oppose, the distance between governed and governors in every area of economic and political life. The British Liberals have been winning by-elections with candidates who stress their interest in local concerns—collecting garbage, schools, local police and the like.

Scramble Map

At the national level the party calls for directly elected parliaments for Scotland, Wales and other regions. It decries the "crazy" Heath plans for a third London airport that would uproot thousands of people. It calls for putting public funds into public transport, trains and canals, rather than highways.

The Swedish Center made huge strides in the last election by denouncing Palme's forced consolidation of local governments, decrying the drift from a beautiful countryside to alienating cities, deploring the bureaucratic impulse that forces people into cold high-rise apartments rather than individual homes.

So far the new politics in Britain and Scandinavia are still minority groupings, no matter how fast they have grown. But if the conventional parties continue to do business at their old stands, essentially executing the will of union, corporate and government bureaucrats, the political map in northern Europe could be scrambled out of all recognition.

She Sifts Out the Evidence

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

(A review in the New York Times of the new book, Kind and Usual Punishment: The Prison Business, by Jessica Mitford.)

If you'll bear with every chapter of Jessica Mitford's "Kind and Usual Punishment: The Prison Business," you'll find that together they flow into a surprisingly well-tempered argument. Which, put in a nutshell, is that crime is not at all what most of us imagine it to be (for instance, Miss Mitford offers much persuasive evidence that, contrary to a widespread assumption, the crime rate is actually on the decline, and the most frightening aspect of that crime rate — i.e., murder and rape — actually constitutes a relatively insignificant part of it).

And yet, so her argument continues, the prison system as it is now set up is not only premised on those false assumptions about crime, but also grows worse and worse because of them. Moreover — and this is perhaps what is most thought-provoking about her argument — what may seem to many of us to be well-meaning proposals for reform — such as improved physical facilities and therapeutic programs designed to "rehabilitate" the criminal — are actually retrograde because they are wrong in principle and serve only to sugarcoat a poisonous pill.

Still, there are a number of things that are bothersome about Miss Mitford's expose, and prevent it from being even half as effective as her earlier book, her corrosive critique of the funeral industry, "The American Way of Death." For one thing, there's the controversial nature of this new book's subject: Everyone was against death, and wholeheartedly so; but by no means is everyone opposed to prisons, and even many who would agree with Miss Mitford that something radical must be done to change our prison system may have some difficulty accepting her conclusion that it should be done away with altogether.

MITFORD
... prison attack

After all, even granting her arguments that 90 per cent of present prison inmates do not belong where they are, and that most of the remaining 10 per cent are not helped by being where they are, there remains the question of how society ought to handle that one violent murderer who is not politically motivated, who is not accessible to psychotherapy, and who would continue to murder violently, if ther were no prison system to restrain him or her. (Sure, "that one violent murderer" may exist only in our imagination, but the point is that Miss Mitford has not disabused us of this fantasy.)

For another thing, there's the problem of Miss Mitford's bias. She doesn't for a moment delude us into thinking that she's approaching her subject with scientific objectivity, but storms right out with her ironies in the fire and her ferocious wit brandished.

Where she is not, in her inimitable manner, ridiculing the absurd or exposing what is patently outrageous (and, unfortunately, the prison business does not lend itself so readily to Miss Mitford's brand of ridicule and expose as did the funeral industry), she is forced to glean material from other people's research. And the frequency with which she must introduce new authorities and cite yet another study in support of her case not only makes for somewhat tedious reading, it also sometimes creates the illusion that she is simply picking the evidence that will support her point of view.

Until she persuades us that "the one violent murder" I referred to earlier is purely a fantasy (and it is especially important that she convince us of this now that this "fantasy" looms so large in the imagination) — I'm afraid that she will continue to preach, as this book does, exclusively to the converted.

Superman's Last Mission

RUSSELL BAKER

Superman is middle-aged. He has every right to be, after all those decades of chasing bullets and flying cross-country without even a windshield to keep his face from chapping.

Still, middle age is something you hadn't expected to happen to Superman, and when you first meet him there in the Black Bird Cafe you immediately sense why the White House must have turned him down.

Chuck Colson is said to have told Haldeman, after their meeting with Superman, "My grandmother could walk over that guy."

Superman does not take a beer. With his aging athlete's physique, he has a weight problem. The famous blue long john union suit, now faded to the color of old jeans, sags loosely where steely abdominals once stopped speeding locomotives dead on the tracks. The double chin is nearly a triple. On the back of the skull the flair is sparse, and a bit too blue to be persuasive.

The Black Bird does not mind his exotic dress, which he always wears after sundown. He believes it discourages muggers, who shun him as a dangerous eccentric. The Black Bird is tolerant, but charges him beer prices for the rose-hip tea which he takes. A doctor has told him it may help restore his X-ray vision.

"I was flying to Atlantic City for my summer vacation," he recalled, "and happened to be passing over Washington when I saw a bat light shining on the Washington Monument. It was coming from the White House."

The White House was trying to reach Batman. It was that terrible moment just before everybody resigned or became indicted.

"As it happened," Superman said, "I had run into Batman at the Mayo Clinic a few weeks earlier, and knew that his arthritis had become so painful that it would be impossible for him to scale the White House fence, much less cope with those fiends in the Congress and press who were unwilling to leave Watergate to the courts.

"This," I thought, "is a job for Superman."

The first interview was not helpful. Being a reporter, even though mild-mannered, he was probably a dangerous liberal. He dressed funny. As a native of Krypton, he was a security risk.

Worse, he was middle aged. The X-ray vision wasn't working right anymore. They had tested him, without his being aware of it. They had taken him into the Oval Office, and he had kept right on babbling away, totally indiscreet; it was obvious that the X-ray vision could no longer see tape recorders hidden in walls.

Then came the full presidential disaster. The president needed help. Hearing that he was in Key Biscayne, Superman took off his blue serge suit, jumped into the sky and flew to Florida.

There, learning that the president had gone to San Clemente, he leaped back into the sky and took off for California. Suffering the distress of heartburn and acid indigestion, he became careless about his altitude over St. Louis and dropped so low that he nearly collided with the Gateway Arch.

He reached San Clemente exhausted. A doctor warned him that at his age flying cross-country non-stop was asking for trouble. But Superman immediately leaped into the sky and headed back to Washington when he learned that the president had already departed for the eastern White House.

At Washington he learned that the president had left for Camp David to make preparations for a trip to Key Biscayne. Superman, who knew about leading a target, headed back to California, expecting to intercept the president at San Clemente and rescue him from Watergate.

Then, over Ashtabula, his right thigh — the one that is absolutely essential to Superman flight — developed a charley horse. Superman made a crash landing. The doctor ordered him to take it easy and lose 25 pounds.

He drinks the rose-hip tea and calls for more. The muggers stay shy of him. Maybe they recognize the man of steel under the chins and pot. "Maybe I can still get it back," he says, "just one more mission, that's what I want. One more big mission."

And what might that be? Superman thinks he might perhaps be able to save the vice-president. The bartender at the Black Bird enjoys that. He laughs. "If you can't save him, dad," he says, "nobody can."

Exchanges Approve In Principle 5% Hike in Broker Commissions

Canadian stock exchanges Monday announced approval in principle for a new rate of brokerage commissions which will result in about 5 per cent more revenue for member firms.

Formal approval is expected at simultaneous meetings of the Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver exchanges on Oct. 12.

As an interim measure, the three exchanges on Oct. 12 will begin charging a 5 per cent surcharge on commissions, if the new rates are approved.

This will have the effect of implementing the higher rates immediately. The surcharge will mean that $1 will be added to the regular commission of $20.

The surcharge will be removed as soon as the higher commission rates begin.

A Vancouver Stock Exchange official said today the new rates might be ready to be implemented late in November but certainly by December.

He expected the Oct. 12 meetings to be just a formality.

"Vancouver members have already approved these new rates," he said, "and we have heard no objections from the east."

He said the exchange is greeting the new rates with a sense of relief, rather than jubilation, because work on the proposals had taken two years and suffered two serious setbacks — a veto by Quebec members and then a modification by the Ontario Securities Commission.

Now, he said, approval for the new rates was quite universal among Canadian investment houses.

The new rates:

—The minimum charge will stay at $5 (an increase to $12 had been sought in an application to the Ontario Securities Commission).

—The basic rate will become 2.5 per cent for stocks priced from one cent to $14. (Under a 1972 proposal, the rate would have risen to 2.6 per cent for stocks priced up to $10.)

—There will be a sliding scale from 2.5 per cent for shares priced at $14 and 1.64 per cent for shares priced at $30 and above.

—For orders over $20,000, rates will be tapered: 70 per cent of the base rate up to $40,000, 50 per cent of the base rate between $40,000 and $60,000 and 30 per cent of the base rate for the portion of the order over $60,000.

Present rates are a minimum price of $5 and a commission rate ranging from 3.5 per cent to 2.6 per cent on prices ranging from one penny to $8.

On shares trading from $8 to $40 the rate starts at 2.6 per cent and tapers down to less than 1 per cent.

There is currently a 30 per cent rebate on commission on trades between $100,000 and $250,000 and a 40 per cent rebate on any portion from $250,000 to $500,000.

ELRIX THROWS IN TOWEL IN ARDO WARRANTS CASE

After spending two years and more than $30,000, David Elrix is throwing in the towel.

A Nanaimo court has ruled he missed the deadline for appealing an earlier verdict which went against him in the Ardo warrants case.

"I just ran out of time and money," Elrix said. "The establishment finally beat me."

In 1971 the Ardo Mining Company issued 71,250 B Warrants entitling the holder to buy one share of Ardo mines at a fixed low price if exercised by Oct. 30, 1971.

Elrix says he and a group of other Vancouver Islanders cornered the market on the warrants. When professional traders sold short, they were forced to pay high prices to the Elrix group to buy the warrants and cover their position.

According to Elrix, one professional trader never did cover his deficit of 1,800 shares.

When the price of the warrants rose rapidly, the Vancouver Stock Exchange suspended trading on Sept. 9, 1971, and the suspension continued until after Oct. 30 when the warrant became worthless.

Elrix sued the exchange for alleged conspiracy and negligence in halting the trading in the warrants. He prosecuted his own case against the exchange.

The case went to the Supreme Court where it was ruled Elrix had simply gambled and lost and there was no evidence of conspiracy or neglect by the exchange.

Elrix planned to appeal, a procedure which must be launched within 60 days of the recording of a judgment in order to be valid. Unknown to Elrix, the decision was recorded on July 17, 1973, and time to appeal expired on Sept. 17, 1973.

"It's all over," he said. "They used 10 lawyers and all the resources of the Vancouver Stock Exchange against me. I can't afford to fight any more."

Vancouver Stock Exchange officials declined comment on the case.

Band . . . Or Else Insurance Men Told

TORONTO (CP) — Unless property and casualty insurance companies band together, "the government will be in our business in much greater measure than is currently the case," says G. E. Johnson, chairman of the National Association of Mutual Insurance Companies.

He spoke Monday at the opening of the association's annual meeting attended by more than 1,600 delegates representing 1,020 insurance companies, most of them U.S.-based. The three-day convention is the first held outside the United States by NAMIC.

"Government is sensitive to the wishes of the people and people are consumers," said Johnson.

"Therefore government is exerting pressure on the insurance industry to reshape its corporate structures and objectives."

He said the industry has responded by providing insurance for dwellings in inner core areas of large U.S. cities and with flood insurance even in flood-prone districts.

"And . . . whether we like it or not, the no-fault plan is an idea whose time has come," he said.

Volkswagen Boosts Canadian Prices

TORONTO (CP) — Volkswagen Canada Ltd. today announced higher suggested retail prices for three 1974 models going on sale in Canada. Other models will be introduced later this fall when new prices will be revealed.

The company said the price for its 1974 Beetle is being increased 17 per cent to $2,895 from $2,475 and covers a double-jointed rear axle and rear window defroster as standard equipment.

The Super Beetle is increased to $3,195, up 15.1 per cent from $2,775, and the Karmann Ghia coupe is increased 10.9 per cent to $4,100 from $3,750.

In the United States, Volkswagen announced an average 14-per-cent increase in 1974 model prices.

A liberalized service and maintenance warranty will be included in both countries under which virtually all parts could be replaced free during the first year or 20,000 miles after purchase.

The increases, a spokesman said, stem from rising production costs and dollar devaluation against the West German mark. Differences between Canadian and U.S. prices result from different duty rates and other costs.

Suggested U.S. price for the Beetle is $2,625, Super Beetle $2,849, Karmann Ghia $3,475, two-door 412 sedan $3,775 and station wagon $4,350.

Imasco

Tobacco Securities Trust Co. Ltd. of London plans to sell up to 500,000 shares of its holdings in Imasco Ltd. of Montreal.

TST, which holds 1,382,000 Imasco shares, or about 14 per cent of those outstanding, said that as a publicly-quoted investment trust the board considered its Imasco holdings represented too high a proportion of its portfolio, an Imasco statement said.

Because of the increase in market value of Imasco stock, its proportion of the TST portfolio has risen from about 15 per cent to more than 25 per cent in the last four years, the statement said.

Peyto Oils

Peyto Oils Ltd. of Calgary has reported a deficit of $387,055 or a loss of eleven cents per share for the year ended May 31, 1973, compared with a deficit of $99,210 or a loss of two cents per share for the year ended May 31, 1972.

Calumet Creek

CALGARY (CP) Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Co. Ltd. and Calumet Creek Oils Ltd. has announced that agreement has been reached for the acquisition by Hudson's Bay of Calumet's interest in 103,375 acres of Athabasca oil sands leases.

In exchange, Calumet will receive a 13.8-per-cent interest in Hudson's Bay oil-producing properties in the Bellshill-Lake Ellerslie unit in Alberta.

Calumet, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Atlantic Richfield Canada Ltd., has a 4.6-per-cent interest in the oil sands leases, which represent substantially all of the assets of Calumet.

Mobil Oil

Mobil Oil of Canada Ltd. says it has found high quality crude oil in drilling at its first well on the Newfoundland continental shelf.

The company said drilling at the well 214 miles east of St. John's has produced 268 barrels a day of good quality, low-sulphur crude oil from one of the five zones tested.

Drilling at the site has been stopped and another well is being drilled nearby.

Wall and Redekop

Consolidated net earnings of Wall and Redekop Corp. Ltd. rose to $341,134 in the first six months of 1973 from $147,146 a year earlier.

This is an increase of 132 per cent.

Gross revenues were $10,767,085 to the end of June, up 51 per cent from $6,983,801 in the first half of 1971.

Per share earnings for the period under review were 19 cents compared with eight cents the year before.

Canada Permanent Income Investments
Offering of Trust Units
Investment Manager: Canada Permanent Trust Company
Price $10 per trust unit
(Minimum Purchase is 100 units)

Canada Permanent Income Investments is a new closed-end income investment trust. The Trust intends to invest its funds primarily in high quality fixed income debt securities with the objective of providing unitholders with a reliable flow of monthly cash income and safety and security of capital. In seeking its objective the Trust will employ portfolio management techniques and may borrow limited additional funds to obtain investment leverage.

The Trust intends to distribute substantially all of its net income to unitholders monthly commencing approximately three months after the completion of this offering. It is also expected that one-half of net realized capital gains, if any, will be distributed annually. All unitholders will be offered the opportunity to regularly reinvest distributions in additional Trust Units.

Copies of the preliminary prospectus may be obtained in any province of Canada from such of the undersigned and other dealers as may lawfully distribute the preliminary prospectus in such province.

I'm interested in learning more about Canada Permanent Income Investments. Please send me a preliminary prospectus.

Nine Top NYC

GENEVA (UPI) — Nine European Cities are now more expensive than New York with a 10th, Brussels, about the same, the magazine Business International said Monday.

The Geneva-based publication said three Japanese cities — Tokyo, Osaka and Kobe — are more expensive still.

Statistics were compiled by Business International in 46 cities as part of a survey conducted for multinational companies to help them draw up personnel policies.

The most expensive European city, it said, is Stockholm, followed by Oslo, Paris, Duesseldorf, Frankfurt, Zurich, Geneva, Copenhagen, Paris and Vienna.

Madrid and Barcelona are the most reasonable major cities in Europe, it said, followed by Lisbon, Milan, Rome, London, Athens and Amsterdam.

The index is based on a typical shopping basket, alcoholic beverages, household expenses, personal care, tobacco, utilities, clothing, domestic help, recreation and entertainment and personal transportation.

Food, the survey said, is most expensive in Stockholm and lowest in Athens.

Geneva heads the list for clothing with Athens again the cheapest, while Paris and Vienna are the most expensive for recreation and entertainment, with Athens and Lisbon the least expensive.

With 100 the basic index figure for New York in all categories, Stocholm is as high as 152 for transportation and 143.9 for food. Geneva reaches 131.7 for clothing, and Paris 103.2 for entertainment.

Besides Stocholm, the "shopping basket" is more expensive than New York in Copenhagen, Duesseldorf, Frankfurt, Geneva, Zurich, Paris, Vienna, Tokyo and Hong Kong.

Welsh Use Falling

LONDON (WP) — The number of Welshmen who speak Welsh has continued to fall during the last decade, official statistics revealed Monday.

The proportion of the population of Wales who speak the area's original native language is now 20.8 per cent, compared with 26 per cent in 1961 and 49.9 per cent at the beginning of the century.

In a population of 2,725,000 in 1971, 542,400 said they spoke Welsh. The number was 656,000 in 1961, 997,400 in 1911, and 929,800 in 1901.

BURNHAM FIGHTS ON

George Burnham is back to square one in his dogged fight against the Canadian Flag.

A writ of summons against members of the federal government — sent to Victoria MP Allan McKinnon for registration with the Supreme Court in Ottawa — has been returned.

"He (McKinnon) said I can't start at the top. I have to come up through the local courts to the federal court," said Burnham, now 83.

"I'm registering the writ today at county court in the criminal division," Burnham said, adding County Court Judge Drake had advised him in his last court appearance in 1971 that the proceedings belonged in criminal court.

Burnham's writ charges Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, Finance Minister John Turner, Postmaster General Andre Ouellet and Minister of Transport Jean Marchand, among others, with fraud.

"I kept on taking it to civil court — been there three times now and finally the judge admitted it should be in criminal court," said Burnham.

Drake then said Burnham has "persistently and without any reasonable ground instituted vexatious legal proceedings with respect to or concerning the validity of the Canadian flag."

Pollen's 'Palace' Survives Blast

Victoria Alderman Mike Young made a last-ditch effort today to persuade fellow aldermen against approval of a new downtown parking structure, between Courtney and Broughton, warning the project would be cause for regret, "for years to come."

Young told council's public works committee he was convinced seven out of nine council members are "crazy" in supporting the proposal for a $900,000 parking facility at that location, when there was no proven need for it and other parking structures had blighted the downtown scene.

Young said the parkade on lower Yates Street "must be one of the most god-awful sights man ever created."

"I must say we are really doing something for our landscape with these parkades. It really chokes me up," Young added.

Council gave formal approval to the capital works project last week, and the committee today showed little inclination to support Young by re-opening discussion.

Mayor Peter Pollen did say, however, that emerging from current talks with the provincial government it might prove possible to develop a more comprehensive scheme than is now envisaged, with the parking structure included in a general government building complex.

Last word on the subject from Young: "When it's constructed we're going to call it Peter Pollen's Parking Palace."

On another aspect of parking problems, the committee grappled ineffectively with the question: How do you persuade apartment dwellers in James Bay to use the parking lots provided and not park their vehicles on the streets?

Committee chairman Ald. Clyde Savage said single family dwellers on Boyd Street are "hopping mad" because the apartment residents' cars jam the streets and even obstruct the driveways to private homes.

Planning director Geoff Greenhalgh said the real problem is not inadequate parking standards for new apartments, but the fact that people who live in them just will not use the spaces provided. "It's more convenient to park on the street, they do so and the parking lots are half-empty," Greenhalgh said.

Traffic engineer Dave Campbelll said his department had suggested enforcement measures but these had been rejected as impractical by city police.

After Pollen commented it was not up to the police to rule on the question, the committee tabled the matter until Campbell suggests his own solutions.

Quadra Extension Approved

A $202,000 extension to Quadra Street designed to relieve downtown traffic congestion with a southern bypass route received the green light at City Hall today, after the project had been stalled three years.

The scheme involves extending and re-aligning Quadra along Rupert as far as Heywood, to provide a ring road system for hundreds of provincial government civil servants who now use either Government of Douglas.

Informally approved by city counsil's committee of the whole last week, the Quadra project received formal endorsement today from the public works committee.

It is the first step in a long-term program which will likely see Quadra and Vancouver developed as a one-way pair.

At today's meeting Mayor Peter Pollen stressed council should make clear to the public is is progressing with its road program in an orderly, planned nammer, "and not just carvinmg up the city for the fun of it."

Pollen said road improvements are an essential first step toward the city's aspirations for downtown malls, adding, "there is method is our madness."

'Safe' Report Defuses Beach Protest

By BRUCE OBEE
Times Staff

Behind the Tweed Curtain there are beaches covered with "pale green algae, grey scum, rotting seaweed and muck" — and its perfectly safe for swimming.

At Oak Bay council's parks and recreation committee meeting Monday night Beach Drive residents who attempted to blame Oak Bay Marina for polluting nearby waters were rather shocked to learn the beaches are not polluted.

About 30 apartment-dwellers launched an attack on the marina saying two breakwaters — "put up purely for the benefit of the marina" — have restricted the flow of water which kept the beaches clean.

The group also complained of overcrowded mooring conditions, heavy traffic to and from the marina, noise from Sealand's animals, inadequate toilet facilities, unsightly heaps of rock, and noise from sailboat rigging banging against hollow masts.

In a letter to the committee, Mrs. Gladys M. Gowland, 902—1420 Beach Drive,, said "the marina is run purely for monetary gain while the hundreds of property owners from Margate Avenue to near Glenlyon School are increasingly filled with disgust, despair and anger.

"This blatantly commercial incubus with its Coney Island atmosphere," the letter continued, "has no place in a residential area and it is depreciating the value of our properties.

"To live on the waterfront is becoming a nightmare. Above the gas station now flies a Canadian flag. It should be at half-mast."

'Get-Well Card' for Octopus

Mrs. Gowland told the meeting she was becoming concerned about the health of Sealand's animals and was considering sending the octopus a get-well card.

Throughout the meeting she blamed the breakwaters for the "despoilation of the beautiful bay" in front of her home.

"We want the rollers back and we want the breakwaters out," she said repeatedly.

Mrs. Gowland's allegations were supported by letters written to council by 13 other nearby residents.

Hamish Simpson, headmaster of Glenlyon School, said the group had "levelled their guns at Oak Bay Marina" and pointed out that marina-owner Bob Wright was probably equally concerned about pollution because of the animals at Sealand.

Simpson suggested the outfall beside the school could be one of the causes for the foul smell along the shoreline.

In a 45-minute address to the meeting Bob Wright said he was "extremely concerned" about pollution in the area and had asked University of Victoria oceanographer Dr. Jack Littlepage to conduct various tests.

The atmosphere of the meeting changed drastically when Littlepage said there was "no evidence that either the marina or the breakwaters had any effect" on the nearby beaches.

Littlepage, who is expected to submit a report to the committee next week, said his study of the shoreline showed there was no "bacterial contamination" and algae growing along the shore is not unusual for this time of year.

The odor is caused by the decomposition of algae which grows in the summer, he said, and will be washed away with the first winter storm.

A film on the surface of the water is fresh-water fungi caused by storm drains along the shoreline, said Littlepage, and October winds will likely cause enough wave action to mix it with the salt water.

Natural cycles will cause algae to grow whether or not there's a breakwater, he said.

Beaches Are Living, Changing

"Beaches are living, changing things," he said.

Ald. John Goult said the traffic problem can't be solved.

"We are experiencing a problem with what, in some circles, is called progress.

"The marine drive is one of Victoria's main "selling points," said Goult. "We cannot say to people from California or Saskatchewan 'you have now hit the Tweed Curtain, turn around and go back'."

Wright emphatically opposed allegations the marina was an "eyesore" telling the meeting that he has received numerous letters from European and American municipalities wanting similar marinas.

He offered his "very sincere and humble apology" for the animal noise, adding he may have solved the problem and a new public address system also had been recently installed to eliminate noise caused by regular shows at Sealand.

After nearly three and a half hours of discussion the committee passed a motion to begin a monitoring program in the waters, to investigate extending the Glenlyon outfall, and to check if any nutrients are being pumped into the water.

And the Fish Went Too

Two men leapt overboard with a fish they had just caught and swam to shore when their boat caught fire in Satellite Channel Monday night.

Sidney RCMP say Richard Young of 11147 West Saanich Road and Dennis O'Sullivan of 9364 Maryland Drive swam about 50 yards after fire destroyed the boat.

Police say Young shut off the motor when they hooked the fish and, when he tried to restart it, there was an explosion.

The B.C. Ferry, Queen of Saanich, passing nearby saw the flames and was about to send a boat when the fire appeared to go out.

Rescue officials in Victoria dispatched the coast guard cutter Ready but, by the time it had arrived, the vessel had sunk.

A police spokesman said the boat was worth $6,000.

In another boating mishap Monday three people were rescued from a 26-foot pleasure craft found sinking off Cowan Point, Bowen Island. The coast guard cutter Mallard towed the vessel to Horseshoe Bay.

Two Victoria couples and a young boy managed to make it to safety Monday afternoon after their 23-foot pleasure craft developed engine trouble.

Mr. and Mrs. L. de Wolfe, Mr. and Mrs. A. de Wolfe and David Wolfe were reported missing after their boat failed to return to Sidney noon Sunday.

After the engine failed their boat drifted to Roche Harbor on San Juan Island, ending a search in which the Canadian coast guard cutter Ready and an American coast guard cutter took part.

OUTBOARD INBOARD

A Saanich fisherman was taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital Monday after his 65-horsepower motor flipped into his boat as he was heading towards shore.

Langford firemen said Jack Handysides, of 4280 Glanford, caught his limit fishing in Becher Bay and was heading in when his boat hit a log. The motor flipped in the boat, crashing through the transom.

Handysides received cuts to both legs and feet. The 16-foot boat was towed to shore by a passing fisherman. Handysides was treated at Royal Jubilee and released.

Victoria Likes To Tango

They banned it in Winnipeg — but in Victoria they're coming out in droves to see Last Tango in Paris.

City police have received no complaints about the movie since it opened last Friday at the Odeon Theatre where manager Jack Armstrong reports attendance has been good.

He admits Harry in Your Pocket — a comedy filmed in part in Victoria and showing at the same theatre — is doing better than Last Tango. And occasionally some patrons walk out of Last Tango. But no one has objected to the film being shown.

Meanwhile in Winnipeg, where the film was seized by police, a charge against Odeon Theatres Canada Ltd. for showing Last Tango, allegedly an obscene film, has been withdrawn by the Crown.

Saanich First to Back Royal Theatre Purchase

Saanich has become the first municipality to say it is willing to pay its share of the $250,000 purchase of tre Royal Theatre.

The decision to take part in the transaction was made at a special meeting Monday night.

Mayor Hugh Curtis said today, "Saanich is prepared to take part in the Royal Theatre purchase with certain provisos."

He said the first of these would be that the cost be shared on the usual intermunicipal cost-sharing formula — 50 per cent per capita and 50 per cent assessment.

"Saanich will recommend that the theatre be managed by a commission with councils and community represented," he added.

Curtis said his council recommended that the initial agreement "might well be for a five-year period."

He stressed: "Some provision should be made that any participating municipality after five years could withdraw with one year's notice."

Stating that a report on the building by the fire marshal was expected "momentarily," Curtis said that Saanich's decision to go ahead is dependent on the report being favorable.

Victoria council has, in a caucus meeting, agreed in principle to pay its share of the purchase, depending on what the other Greater Victoria municipalities decide.

The purchase of the theatre is on the agenda of this afternoon's meeting of the Greater Victoria Intermunicipal Committee. Should the other municipalities agree to go ahead the city is expected to ratify its participation at a regular council meeting.

Compassion May Bend Bylaw

Compassion, rather than conformity to a bylaw, was chosen by Saanich council Monday when faced with an application of an elderly citizen who wants to be self-sufficient rather than go on welfare.

The 61-year-old McKenzie resident wants permission to have a greenhouse built on her property and grow vegetables for sale in order to keep herself and her mother, who is 95.

"Mrs. — is very reluctant to apply for welfare benefits," contractor M. P. Paine wrote council, "She feels very strongly that she would rather be of service to the community and earn as much as possible rather than receive assistance from others."

Paine said the applicant did not propose to put a stand on the street but would sell the produce from her large backyard.

Municipal planner Tom Loney pointed out that the municipality did not have authority to approve retail sales from residentially-zoned property.

Ald. Leslie Passmore said, "I suggest that Mr. Paine gets his permit and go ahead and build the greenhouse."

Ald Edith Gunning, noting she had seen small fruit stands in other areas on McKenzie, suggested the application should receive further study.

It will be dealt with at the next meeting of the municipal planning committee.

Police Find Hitch-Hiker

Sidney RCMP have located a young woman hitch-hiker who was a passenger in a car that crashed on Patricia Bay Highway Saturday night killing Peter Maude, 22, of 2040 White Birch, Sidney.

Police were unable to release her name and say only she was found Monday on one of the Gulf Islands.

Police say the young woman hitched a ride to the B.C. Ferries in a car driven by Joseph Iverson, 18, of Verdier Avenue, Brentwood Bay. Shortly before 7 p.m. the car went out of control near the Wains-MacDonald Park intersection and crashed into the highway divider.

Maude, a passenger, was thrown out and dragged under the car about 100 feet.

COLLAPSED METAL mesh is all that is left after the roof of an underground carpark under construction at Tolcross and Eldon caved in today while workmen were pouring cement. No one was hurt by the collapse, caused when lumber supporting the roof gave way. The carpark will be part of a 94-suite apartment block being built by G. S. Saunders. (Bill Halkett photo.)

The Lassie: Gals Get Good Marks From Good

A full week, once over lightly:

Monday: A meeting and social with the Lassie people — the ladies curling championships will be held here in February, you know; Tuesday: A visit with Scotty Bowman, Hal Laycoe and assorted hockey buffs; Wednesday: The Canadiens and Kings here; Thursday: Fijian rugby as played by happy feet; Friday: More curling capers, a kooky program at the Racquet Club; Saturday: Minnesota — hmmm!

Macdonalds, the tobacco people who push curling, brought in their big guns for the Lassie kickoff function — Frank O'Brien from Montreal; Bert Cameron from Winnipeg; Jack Wells, likewise, and big Bill Good from Vancouver. They weren't needed. The authority: Good.

"This group of gals is so organized they could start the Lassie tomorrow," Good enthused. "They are better organized at this stage than any other group with which I've ever been associated in curling."

Then he explained: "The ladies run it — the Lassie. We are just here to help them with any problems. As I see it, they haven't any."

So take a bow, Ada Fuller and company, and get on with "Crocus Mountain." That's that big bare rock behind the arena, and the girls are going to cover it with crocuses for the event. Incidentally, Good hasn't missed a Brier since 1957 and that's the only one he's missed since 1946. Wells has an unbroken 21-year attendance record. The arena seats over 5,000, the gals already have money in the bank for 1,100 tickets and the goal is to fill the place, every day. Sure, it's premature; but want to bet they don't do it?

About hockey, and it is former Victorian Colin Kilburn who is at the helm of that Roanoke team which supposedly has been giving the Vancouver Blazers fits in their preseason meanderings. But not really. Actually it was more like an intra-club swing, the players changing jerseys with each game. A question of judgment. When Montreal's director of player personnel, Claude Ruel, was here, he suggested that Vancouver's towering rookie defenceman, Bob Dailey, might be a year or two away from the NHL, which is probably the reason Dailey was a draft choice the Habs traded to the Canucks for future considerations. Hal Laycoe, the Canuck GM disagrees. "I think he can make it," said Laycoe.

Then there are the Hebentons, Andy, the father, and Clay, the son. Clay had a good camp with the Canucks, but got caught in the surplus goalie squeeze and will play his hockey this season in Des Moines. Meanwhile, Andy admits "it isn't easy any more" as he spoke about his 25th season in professional hockey. "It's hard work," he said of the preseason grind, "running and all that . . . times certainly have changed. One thing we don't get is the weights," he confided. And what a remarkable record this man has. He's been playing pro since 1949-50 (Cincinnati), has missed only two scheduled league games in the last 21 years, owns the NHL endurance record of 630 games, while in all pro, his mark is over 1,000.

What a difference, too, because then Andy had to excuse himself, along with Larry McNab and Howie Hughes, two other veterans. "We've got a curfew," he explained. "We have to be in by 11. My kid can stay out later than I can." But cheer up, Andy, it'll soon be your birthday. Oct. 1, isn't it? You'll be 44, right? Maybe they'll relent and give you a late pass that night. Meanwhile, that other Vancouver team, the Blazers, has sold over 9,000 season tickets and may have the first regular season sellout at the Coliseum even though the Canucks are already "sold out" for all games. The Howes, Gordie and Mark, will be there with Houston Oct. 17. Canucks don't open at home until the 19th. And yes, schedules are available here.

Now, one for the libbers. When Good was here he also said, "Curlers here are going to get their eyes opened at the calibre of curling in the Lassie; the biggest improvement in curling in Canada has been from the gals in the Maritimes; the reason they've advanced far more quickly than their male counterparts is that they've listened and learned from the instructional tours of Don Duguid and crowd and have really gone Western." Yes, Bill, we know the Lassie is in February.

Mets Flaunt Folding Cubs

By The Associated Press

New York Mets are champions of the National League East and they did it in Chicago, as if to flaunt their success in the face of the failure-ridden Cubs.

The Mets clinched it Monday in a 6-4 victory over the Cubs, who once were eight games ahead of the field, but then did their customary fold.

Third baseman Wayne Garrett said in the champagne-drenched dressing room that he never was discouraged when the Cubs were so far ahead.

"Not really," he said. "Chicago has always done it (fold). Three out of five years I've been here the Cubs have gotten way out in front at the start then all of a sudden they hit the wall.

"But I'll admit back in June when they had the best record in the majors I thought they had a lot better chance than we did."

The Mets clinched their title in a morning game, the first of a scheduled doubleheader. Fifteen minutes after it was over, the meaningless second contest was called off and the champagne was uncorked.

Rusty Staub, former Montreal star who had four hits in leading the way into the pennant playoff against Cincinnati Reds, said: "A couple of months ago we were out of it, then we put it all together."

Berra said that only once during the season did he think the Mets might not make it.

"That's when we were about 12 games out," Berra said, "and had all those injuries."

"I guess the baseball race is like a distance runner," Garrett said. "If you give it all you've got at the beginning, you've got nothing left at the end.

"You've got to save a little so you have that last kick."

The Mets wound up 1½ games ahead of St. Louis Cardinals who could have been involved in a playoff for the East Division title if the Cubs had beaten New York twice. Pittsburgh Pirates, who finished third, also had a chance to tie for first but lost 4-3 to San Diego Padres in the only other National League game Monday.

The Pirates, however, could be excused for not winning their afternoon game as they knew they were eliminated before they took the field against the Padres. Pittsburgh's only hope was a win over San Diego while Chicago defeated New York twice.

The Mets, who won their first divisional title since 1969, also received strong hitting from Jerry Grote and brilliant relief pitching from Tug McGraw.

Grote singled home two runs in the third inning, giving the Mets a 3-0 lead. McGraw allowed one hit after taking over from Tom Seaver, 19-10, in the seventh inning to earn his 26th save of the season.

Later in New York, a crowd estimated by police at 1,000 gathered at La Guardia Airport's remote marine air terminal to welcome home the Mets.

It was a young crowd that came equipped with tape decks for entertainment while they waited for the Mets. The team's flight was delayed two hours on the ground in Chicago.

During the delay, McGraw entertained the team party with a series of awards. Willie Mays won the champagne contest after taking only three swigs of the bubbly stuff and passing out.

When the Mets' plane landed, Berra was the first one out and he was greeted by chants of "We're No. 1, we're No. 1, we're No. 1" from the crowd.

The Mets were in last place, 12 games behind in July and battling a seemingly endless string of injuries. At various times, catcher Grote, shortstop Bud Harrelson, left fielder Cleon Jones and first baseman John Milner spent terms on the disabled list.

Facilities Complimented

"It's most important that the community be behind the tournament organizers 100 per cent and, from first impressions, I'm sure Victoria is capable of running an event of this calibre."

The "event," in this case, is the 1974 Babe Ruth baseball world series. The speaker was Ron Tellefson, development director of the organization from Trenton, N.J., who was in Victoria on Monday to meet business and civic representatives and inspect facilities.

Victoria, Abbeville, La., and Pueblo, Colo., all are bidding to host the series, a week-long tournament which brings together nine teams of 14- and 15-year-olds Aug. 17-24.

Tellefson was accompanied on the trip to Victoria by Sam Mento of Wilmington, Del., another representative of the international organization.

"If you don't get the series it won't be because of your facilities," Tellefson said after touring the proposed site of Royal Athletic Park.

The double-loss elimination series will include teams from eight regions — New England, Middle Atlantic, South West, South East, Ohio Valley, Mid-West Plains, Pacific Southwest and Pacific Northwest — as well as the host club.

Canadian teams have a chance to represent the Middle Atlantic (Ontario-Quebec) and Pacific Northwest (B.C.) areas.

Victoria-Esquimalt Babe Ruth League, the group making the Victoria bid, has a committee of 70 to 80 ready to help run the event.

League president Neil Bradley and Wilf Sadler will serve as co-chairmen if Victoria is selected.

Cats Gain Defenceman, Lose Goalie

The two-way traffic lane was the busy one in and out of Victoria Cougars' quarters Monday.

The Western Canada Junior Hockey League team acquired a new defenceman, lost a goaltender and released two other players.

The new rearguard is Leo Parker, a 19-year-old defenceman who last season divided his time between Brandon Wheat Kings and Swift Current Broncos.

Parker, who counted four goals, 18 assists and 109 penalty minutes in his personal total last season, was obtained from Swift Current in exchange for centre Brad Richardson.

Cougar coach Ollie Dorohoy feels Parker will add the "toughness" that appeared to be lacking on defence in exhibition games. Parker stands six-foot-two and weighs 180 pounds.

A goaltending problem developed when holdover Perry Mulhall balked at the idea he may serve as backup to Glen Bueckert. Both are in their final junior year.

Bueckert's strong preseason performances earned him the starting assignment in Saturday's opening game at Memorial Arena against Calgary Centennials. The arrangement didn't suit Mulhall and Dorohoy ordered him to his home in Comox. Dorohoy indicated the Cougars may attempt to deal Mulhall to another club.

Cougars recalled Glen Anweiler and Gerry Akerstream from Nanaimo Clippers, Victoria's affiliate in the B.C. Junior League. Dorohoy is to decide this week which goalie will back up Bueckert.

Victoria also announced the release of 19-year-old winger Brian Miller and 18-year-old defenceman Rick Lalonde. The cuts reduced Victoria's roster to 17 players and three goalies.

The 17 on hand are defencemen Rick Williams, Parker, Cal Kitching, Kim Clackson, Rick Lapointe, Lorry Gloeckner and Jerry Nicholson; centres Ron Poole, Al McLaren, Mel Bridgeman and Derek Haas, and wingers Don Dzaldyk, Brian Day, Peter Morris, Brad Anderson, Glen Ing and Mark Lomenda.

Elsewhere in the league, two goals by holdover Jerry Holland carried Calgary to a 2-1 victory over New Westminster Bruins at Quesnel. It was Calgary's sixth victory in nine games against New Westminster.

And in Saskatoon, league president Ed Chynoweth announced that Regina Pats will compete in the Star Cup tournament in Sweden Dec. 19-Jan. 4. Pats will play five tournament games and two exhibitions.

Regina has been forced to reschedule four league games because of the trip.

Victoria Figure Skating Club's new season is under way but there are openings in all sections of club activities, including junior, intermediate and senior divisions.

LEAGUES, CAHA AGREE ON DRAFT

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Amateur Hockey Association CAHA has ratified an agreement with two professional hockey leagues regarding amateur players moving into the professional ranks before the age of 20.

Gordon Juckes, executive director of the CAHA, said Monday that the amateur hockey association board agreed at a weekend meeting in Toronto to a set of principles worked out between tht body, the National Hockey League and World Hockey Association.

Details of the agreement were not released, but Juckes said it relates to the way young players are drafted and signed and what the two leagues will pay.

A provision has been built into the agreement which allows exceptional young players to move into the professional leagues despite the fact that the players are still eligible to play junior hockey.

Chamberlain Suing

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Wilt Chamberlain filed a suit Monday against Los Angeles Lakers to invalidate the option clause of his contract with the National Basketball Association club. He accused the team and the NBA of conspiring to monopolize the sport.

Chamberlain's action came after the Lakers filed suit Monday in Los Angeles contending that the option clause in Chamberlain's contract prevents him from playing for San Diego Conquistadors of the American Basketball Association during the 1973-74 season.

Chamberlain, who played the second year of a two-year contract with the Lakers last season, recently announced he had signed a contract as player-coach of the Conquistadors at a reported $600,000 annually.

The Lip Quits

HOUSTON (AP) — Leo Durocher became manager of Houston Astros last year on a shot in the dark—and missed.

Durocher, 67, who has managed three World Series baseball teams, took charge of a team many forecast as a pennant contender for 1973.

He said in the spring he'd like to take a team all the way one more time. Instead, the Astros tumbled from a second-place finish in 1972 to a disappointing fourth this season in the National League West.

So, Durocher announced his resignation Monday and general manager Spec Richardson named third-base coach Preston Gomez as his replacement.

The official wording said Durocher resigned but it was more likely a retirement for the volcanic Durocher, whose career as a player and manager span about 50 years.

Reverse Gear Stalls Falcons

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit Lions shifted to reverse gear Monday night and left Atlanta Falcons stuck in "park."

A pair of razzle-dazzle reverse plays, plus the superb running of substitute fullback Mel Farr, led Detroit to a 31-6 thrashing of Atlanta in the National Football League game before 45,599 fans.

The win was the first for the Lions—members of the National Conference, Central Division— against a loss and a tie. Atlanta, in the Western Division of the National Conference, has lost two straight after a 62-7 win over New Orleans Saints.

The Lions did it again in the fourth quarter when Ron Jessie scored on a nine-yard reverse for the final TD. That put the game out of reach with 12 minutes remaining.

Farr, who played in place of Steve Owens who pulled a leg muscle in pre-game warmups, rushed for 90 yards in 16 carries including a 32-yard touchdown run with one second left in the first half.

The Falcons lost three of five fumbles and Detroit intercepted two Dick Shiner passes.

Series Starts Oct. 13

NEW YORK (AP) — The scheduled dates and times for the major league World Series were announced Monday by the baseball commissioner's office.

New York Mets victory over Chicago Cubs, who play in lightless Wrigley Field, eliminated the possibility of a World Series played entirely in the afternoon hours.

The Series will open in an American League city, either Baltimore or Oakland, on Saturday, Oct. 13. If the A's take the American League pennant, the game is scheduled for 1 p.m. PDT. Should the Orioles capture the American League flag, the game begins in Baltimore at 11 a.m. PDT.

The game for Sunday, Oct. 14, will be at 11 a.m. PDT in Baltimore or 1:30 p.m. PDT in Oakland.

The teams will then travel to the National League city, either New York or Cincinnati, for night games Tuesday, Wednesday, and, if necessary, Thursday. Regardless of the outcome of the Mets-Reds clash, all the games will be played at 5:30 p.m. PDT.

If necessary, the two clubs will take a day off for travel to the American League city for the final two games. On Saturday, Oct. 20, the game will begin at 11 a.m. PDT in Baltimore or 1 p.m. PDT in Oakland. Sunday's finale will be at 11 a.m. in Baltimore or 1:30 p.m. in Oakland.

Games Congress Ponders Eligibility

VARNA, Bulgaria (CP) — Several topics that could affect athletes attending the 1976 Summer Games in Montreal were the subject of broad discussion during Monday's opening session of the 10th Olympic Congress.

The main theme expressed in speeches by various delegates representing international sports federations indicated that revision of Rule 26 — the eligibility rule covering athletes taking part — was uppermost in the minds of most delegates.

The congress gives members of sports federations and national Olympic committees an opportunity to present their views to the International Olympic Committee's main body.

In addition to the move to have the eligibility rule changed, federation delegates expressed divergent views on the subjects of Olympic village styles, the nationalistic tendency of medal winning ceremonies, and the over-all "giganticism" of today's Games.

However, it appeared that only the problem of eligibility and the various ceremonies could be acted on in time to affect the 1976 Games at Montreal and Innsbruck, Austria. The Austrian city is host to the Winter Games that year.

Island Cup Matches Prove To Be Big Hit

If enthusiasm is indicative of an overall interest, the new Island Cup matches are here to stay. The weekend matches at Glen Meadows were an outstanding success despite the "no decision" reached between the 10-man teams.

As a matter of fact, the 7½-7½ draw between the amateurs and professionals added to the excitement. Players who finished and tried to rest in the 19th had to bounce up and watch the last group come in. It was close and exciting.

More important, the enthusiasm shown by both pros and amateurs parallels the keenness displayed by the Inter-Club League action. The Island Cup series should serve Island golf well.

The first benefits were signified by the appearance of five up-Island professionals. Bill Wakeham of Cowichan, Norm Boden of March Meadows, Marlin Thompson of Chemainus, Dave Ewart of Port Alberni and Mike Rivers of Nanaimo think so much of the idea they rushed right down for the weekend. No questions asked.

The idea behind the matches is to add extra interest in Island tournaments. It's working because Bob Hunt is sold.

The former City Amateur titleholder confessed he has put the "must" stamp on only two tournaments — the Island Open and the Cowichan Open. Now, he vows, he'll be gunning for points in "as many tournaments as need be . . ."

The only rewards offered this year's crew were refreshments supplied by Bruce Thom and Jim Barry. It was arranged quite in haste, but at least the series got off the ground.

Upsets of sorts continue to pop up in club championship play and that leaves Vic Painter and Gord Rands as the only defenders with hopes of repeating.

Gordon Verley eliminated defending champion George Bigelow, 3 and 2, in the weekend semi-finals at Victoria Club. Verley now will meet southpaw Al Manson, who defeated Bruce McFarlane 2 and 1, in the final.

Painter, Colwood's defending champ, moved into the fours following the weekend's double round. Medallist Ken Floyd, former champion Lawrie Kerr and Blair Wilson also moved into the semi-finals.

Rands, Cedar Hill's defender and medallist, lived up to his favorite's role by moving into the quarter-finals along with Ken Morgan, Neil Campbell, Walt Spaven, Greg Barnes, Doug Hunt, Peter Moretti and 14-year-old Jimmy Rutledge.

At Gorge Vale, Jim Taylor upset medallist Steve Allen, 4 and 3, to move into the final against Ted Langlois, who claimed a default victory from Lex Sutcliffe.

Another upset was recorded at Glen Meadows when 18-year-old Al Robertson surprised Hal Jacobsen, 2 and 1. Robertson had previously sidelined defending champion Marty Richards and now will face John Russell, a one-up victor over Dave Tremblay, in the final Oct. 14.

PAAVO NURMI
. . . 28 records

Illness Takes Nurmi

HELSINKI (AP) — Paavo Nurmi, 76, the Flying Finn of the athletic tracks between the two world wars, died early today after a long illness.

Nurmi had several heart attacks in recent years and had been partly paralyzed.

A star in all distances beteen 1,500 metres and the marathon, he set 28 world records and won seven gold medals in the Olympics in 1920, 1924 and 1928.

He probably would have won more, but on the eve of the 1932 games in Los Angeles he was declared a professional and banned from Olympic competition.

Nurmi went into semi-seclusion for several years and always thereafter was bitter toward sports writers, accusing them of giving wrong information to the Olympic committee.

Kings Are Counting on 'Brand X'

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

The margarine people aren't interested in selling butter and, by the same token, Larry Regan doesn't like to talk about the World Hockey Association.

As Los Angeles Kings' general manager and No. 1 salesman, Regan's allegiance is to his team and the National Hockey League. Still, there are times when the WHA can't be ignored.

Among those forcing Regan to acknowledge, as quietly as he can, the presence of "the Brand X people" is Los Angeles forward Dan Maloney. It comes out because Maloney looms as one of the good bargains in the Kings' training camp at Memorial Arena.

Los Angeles acquired the robust winger from Chicago Black Hawks last February in exchange for centre Ralph Backstrom. The latter completed the 1972-73 campaign with the Hawks, then decided in the summer to side with Chicago Cougars of the World Association.

That, in effect, makes Maloney "for free."

Regan doesn't make a big thing of the bargain. He knows how the Black Hawks feel because Los Angeles lost right winger Serge Bernier to the Brand X people.

Nonetheless, Regan and coach Bob Pulford have found occasion to smile because of Maloney's steady and oft-spirited play in pre-season workouts. The 190-pound Irish-Canadian proved an instant hit with L.A. fans after his acquisition from Chicago, and he obviously doesn't intend to lose any supporters. He capped his aggressive debut in Los Angeles last February by scoring Kings' winning goal in a game against St. Louis Blues.

In pre-season workouts and exhibitions, Maloney has been Mr. Steady. More important, Pulford appreciates Maloney's infectious attitude on and off the ice.

"We'll be in the playoffs this time around," Maloney insists. "There are a lot of us around who haven't forgotten how close we came to making it last spring. Damn, we were so close we could taste it. We're a year older and that added experience will help."

Operating on a line with holdovers Butch Goring and sophomore Don Kozak, Maloney says "right now I feel just like I did in the summer of 1970."

That was the year the Black Hawks made Maloney their first choice in the amateur draft.

"Being drafted in the first round was the biggest thing in my hockey career," he explained. "I was going to one of the top teams in the league, and I anticipated great things.

"Perhaps I anticipated too much."

He estimates he saw actual ice time in about half of his 131 games with Chicago.

"I'd get to play for two weeks, then I'd sit on the bench for two weeks. Chicago was set in its ways. They did certain things on the ice and expected you to do the same. It never changed."

His part-time role with the Hawks depleted some of the confidence that Maloney had built up during an impressive amateur career with London Knights of the Ontario Junior League.

"I felt my confidence returning as soon as I was traded to Los Angeles," he went on to say. "I've been given a chance to play regularly. Right now, I feel like this is the summer of '70 all over again."

Dolphins Miss Playoffs

Dolphins were dropped from the B.C. Big Four Junior Football League playoff picture Monday when Burnaby Spartans captured the final playoff spot with a 23-13 victory over Vancouver Blue Bombers at Burnaby's Swangard Stadium.

Victoria and Burnaby finished in a tie for third place but Spartans took the berth on the basis of a better points for and against record.

Dolphins finish off the season with an exhibition game against the University of British Columbia at 1 p.m. Sunday in Royal Athletic Park.

Penalties marred the final league game of the season Monday as three players were ejected and 309 yards in penalties stepped off against the two clubs.

Stockers Open Against Bucks

It's ful steam ahead this week with seven games in six nights for intermediate hockey teams launching new seasons in two leagues on the southern Vancouver Island scene.

First to hit the ice will be squads from the three-team Victoria Intermediate League, getting down to serious business tonight at 8:30 in Memorial Arena with a clash between Ingraham Buckaroos and Stockers North Americans.

Bucks will be back in action Wednesday at Juan de Fuca Arena, matching muscles at 9 with James Bay Athletic Association.

Stockers make their second start at 8:30 Thursday in the first of a series of interlocking contests scheduled against the four clubs in the Vancouver Island Intermediate League.

In that one, Stockers go against Chemainus Blues, who will be starting a stint of three games in three nights.

Blues help launch the Island loop's usual Friday double-header program at Esquimalt Sports Centre, tangling with London Boxing Club at 9:15 after University of Victoria Vikings and CFB Esquimalt have completed an argument that starts at 8:15.

On Saturday night, the Blues will be on home ice for a clash against the Boxers and on Sunday, Buckaroos and JBAA go at it in an Island League game at Memorial Arena.

Jerry West Ends Holdout For Pay Hike

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles Lakers announced Monday night that all-pro guard Jerry West has decided to play for the team this season, fore-going his demand for a new contract.

He is expected to play in a National Basketball Association exhibition game against Milwaukee Bucks tonight in Reno, Nev.

"I want to play basketball," West said in a prepared statement. "I owe it to Los Angeles and I owe it to the fans. I had a number of options open to me, but I started my career in Los Angeles and I plan on finishing here."

West was holding out for a renegotiation of the second year of his two-year contract calling for a reported $300,000 a season. The club was fining him $200 a day for each missed practice session.

School Soccer Shocker: Mt. View Over Reynolds

Mount View upset previously-unbeaten Reynolds 4-I Monday to move into fourth place in the Senior High School Socerr League.

In other matches, Mount Douglas blanked Claremont 3-0, Oak Bay topped Belmont 4-1 and Esquimalt shut out Victoria, 5-0.

Mount View, playing on home turf, took a 2-0 lead at half time on goals by Bob Cool and Iggy Kadar. Mark Kline scored twice in the second half to wrap up the victory after Howie Kirk brought Reynolds to within one goal with his 15th tally of the season.

Mount Douglas, also playing at home moved to within one point of leading Reynolds with the victory on second-half goals by Joe Achadina, Craig Palin and Glen Oberg.

Robbie Paris and Richie Hibbert scored two goals each in the first half to lead the Oak Bay win while Don Hansen's second-half penalty shot produced the sole goal for visiting Belmont.

Retain Buttons

Record Fee Paid

BIRMINGHAM, England (Reuter) — Birmingham City, bottom of the English Football League's First Division, Monday paid Leeds United £100,000 (about $240,000) for their reserve goalkeeper, Gary Sprake. The fee was a British record for a goalkeeper.

Ball Crowds Top Magic 30 Million

NEW YORK (AP) — Attendance at major league baseball games passed the 30 million mark in 1973 for the first time in history, commissioner Bowie Kuhn announced Monday.

A total of 30,045,788 fans paid their way into major league ball parks during the season. That bettered the previous high of 29,193,417 set in 1971.

According to unofficial statistics, the American League drew a record total of 13,438,661, breaking the old league record of 12,134,745 set in 1969.

The National League, meanwhile, outdrew the junior circuit for the 12th consecutive year, attracting a total of 16,607,127 paying customers, including 1,246,863 who filed into Montreal Expos games at Jarry Park.

Seventeen clubs topped the one million mark in attendance. Los Angeles Dodgers headed the list with 2,136,192, followed closely by Cincinnati Reds at 2,107,601.

Cleveland Indians had the lowest attendance in the majors, drawing 603,027. San Diego Padres had the lowest figure in the National League, 611,812.

Hockey Men Have Plans For Football

EDMONTON (CP) — Founders of the World Hockey Association hope to set up a third professional football league that would rival the National Football League.

Gary Davidson, WHA president, said in an interview that he is considering the concept (of a third league) but isn't sure if it would be viable at this time.

There is no problem in finding prospective owners and the league could start up as early as next season wth 12 teams, he said.

Some WHA owners are already represented among those planning to participate in the new football league.

Plenty of Material Around for Composting

Compost making is such an elemental job that it's not surprising the rich soil which results should arouse the primitive wish to plant and sow.

To make compost, get the booklet titled Compost for 10 cents from Project Recycle on Borden Street across from the Motor Vehicle Testing Station.

Plenty of material is now available in every garden, with leaves beginning to fall and annual vegetable and flower plants being pulled up as they finish their summer's work.

On a half rainy day last week I broke into the compost heap accumulated during the winter 1972-1973. The material had been piled so that it would be to the north of the section where squash seeds would be sown on the remains of a previous heap.

Plant parts were still recognizable on the outside. This outer layer I skimmed off with the garden fork, laying it loosely on a freshly dug square of ground as a foundation for the summer heap when and if I get around to turning it over. Turning a partly decomposed heap does shorten the time of complete decomposition.

With the outer layer off, the new soil could be seen and felt. There it was, about three and a half feet deep, a lovely pile of brownish crumbly, sweet smelling soil where only long grass, discarded perennial tops and kitchen vegetable and fruit scraps had been dumped all winter.

Not that there was much wasted from vegetables or fruits, but into the house compost pail also goes coffee grounds, tea leaves, floor sweepings, hair combings from humans and cat (Sheba to her friends) and hand-rolled cigarette butts. The matted dust from the vacuum cleaner goes straight to the heap.

Some gardeners look at their home made soil and say "it doesn't look much like soil to me" because they see recognizable egg shells, the odd nutshell, and probably weed seedlings on the top and growing on the outer layer.

The soil as it is can be used for fall planting of trees and shrubs. Further decomposition takes place during winter, and its rough texture aids winter drainage.

For planting small things like primulas as you rub the soil through a one-inch screen to break the few lumps. The same preparation makes a fine soil bed for sowing broad beans this month and early peas. And for renewing the soil in your coldframe where you raise winter lettuce and other salad delicacies.

So long as we raise plants and eat fresh vegetables we need never run out of material for soilmaking. Though there is never enough, it is an exciting experience to have your own two hands involved in the making.

Get the Compost booklet now. It has lists of all the things which go to the making of good soil in the garden.

SOLUTION WEDNESDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

To many players, the finesse is a first-choice play; to the expert, it is a last-resort play. In today's deal, a non-expert was at the helm, and he staked his future on a couple of finesses. His hopes failed to materialize, and he lost a contract that a better player would have fulfilled without resorting to any finesses.

Both sides vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡.

After winning the opening heart lead with his king, upon which East played the encouraging seven-spot, West continued with the heart five to East's ace. To trick three East led a low heart, which South ruffed.

Next came the king and ace of trumps, gathering in the adversely-held pieces. A low diamond was then led off the board, South finessing his jack. Upon winning with the queen, West returned a diamond, South's ace winning.

At this point, declarer had a pure guess as to whether to finesse against East or West for the club queen. He guessed wrongly by leading a club to dummy's ace, after which he returned a club and finessed the jack. West's queen now took the setting trick.

Had East possessed either the club or diamond queen, declarer would have fulfilled his contract as he played it. But even if either of the finesses had been successful, his chosen line of play would have been incorrect.

After drawing trumps, declarer should have cashed his ace and king of diamonds. Then would come the diamond jack, West taking it with his queen (or, in theory, East would win the trick if he were the possessor of the diamond queen).

West would now be the victim of an end play, since hearts and diamonds would have been eliminated from both the North and South hands. If he returned either a heart or a diamond (if he had a diamond), dummy would trump it as, simultaneously, South discarded his losing club. And if, instead, West led a club, declarer would get a "free" finesse, thus making three club tricks regardless as to which of the defenders had the queen of clubs.

But, unfortunately for his side, our actual South declarer elected to stake his destiny on one of two finesses being successful. Although he was unlucky, he really got no more and no less than what he deserved.

Damaged Ship Boosts Hiring

As many as 50 extra workmen may be taken on by Yarrows Ltd. in order to repair the Japanese freighter Sun Diamond, badly damaged in a collision with the British freighter Erawan last week in Vancouver Harbor.

A Yarrows spokesman said today that workmen working on ship construction in the yard will be diverted to work on the Sun Diamond and as many as 50 additional men will be employed "at peak periods" in order to get the job completed.

Working around the clock, the spokesman said the job would take at least four weeks.

"Her entire bow section will virtually have to be removed," he said. "New steel is being put in the lower section today but they're still cutting away above."

He said as much as possible will be done before she comes out of the Esquimalt Graving Dock "hopefully, next Monday night."

The remainder of the job will be completed either alongside at the drydock or in Yarrows.

No repairs can be started on the Erawan, now at Burrard Drydock in North Vancouver, until her escaping oil has been stopped.

Mop-up operations on Vancouver beaches O of which Caulfield Cove in West Vancouver was hardest hit — is expected to continue for a few more days.

'STICK TO TRAIL'

Federal parks officials who surveyed an accident scene on the West Coast Trail, warned hikers today to stick to the trail instead of walking along a rocky stretch of shoreline.

The officials investigated the scene where Donald Arthur Matheson, of London, Ont., drowned Sept. 4. He slipped on rocks and fell in to the sea near Logan Creek, about 15 miles from Port Renfrew.

Reg Joscelyn, operation manager for Pacific Rim National Park at Long Beach, said the trail is walkable from Logan Creek to the Walbran River, a distance of six miles.

"The trail is in a reasonable good shape," he said. "The trouble is that some people seem to prefer to walk along the rocky beach area. This can be extremely hazardous, even at low tide, in view of the surge channels."

He said it is unlikely any improvements will be carried out on the trail in this area next year.

The parks department this summer started to improve the trail from the Pachena section, about 15 miles from Bamfield.

John Watts in charge of the trail improvement program, said six bridges, including a suspension bridge, have been completed to date.

"We hope to complete 16 others by the end of this month," he said.

The bridges, he said, are four feet wide.

Wilson Given Takeover Backing

BLACKPOOL, England (AP) — Opposition leader Harold Wilson today outlined plans for a sweeping state takeover by a future Labor government of wide sectors of British business and industry and won his party's massive backing for the program.

Wilson singled out for special attack at the party's annual convention the big multinational corporations, both British and foreign, operating in this country. He said a future Labor government will concentrate all its power on multinational corporations "in the same way as British-owned firms."

The objective, he said, "lies in making economic power answerable to political power, and to ensure that political power is exercised only under the authority of the elected Parliament at Westminster."

This was seen as a slap at the European Common Market which Britain joined Jan. 1. The opposition Labor Party is committed to renegotiating the terms of Britain's entry.

A Labor government which wins power in the next national elections, Wilson said, will take over enough authority "to deal with our domestic industrial feudalism and supranational corporate power, as it must be capable of dealing with irresponsible money power."

Wilson was wildly acclaimed by his party followers. The delegates overwhelmingly rejected left-wing proposals that the nationalization program be carried with a minimum, and in some cases, no compensation to owners of seized firms.

The nationlization program outlined by Wilson would apply to all land not farmed by owners, the mineral wealth under all land and the waters around the nation, all ports, shipbuilding and associated industries, aircraft production, individual firms in the pharmaceutical, machine tool, construction and road haulage industries and all firms that had been previously nationalized but since returned to private ownership by the existing Conservative government of Prime Minister Heath.

Wilson also said Labor would introduce a "planning agreements system with major industrial companies." The system, he said, "will be reinforced by a new industry act" to provide the government with powers to aid individual companies in the national interest" in return for a public shareholding.

The industry act would give the government the right to invest in or take over individual corporations in the national interest.

Wilson repeated his opposition on electoral grounds to left-wing proposals stating that 25 major corporations would be nationalized and he was upheld by the delegates.

He said the government will enter the merchant banking and the home-loan fields to make sure that money is available at low interest for those wanting to purchase homes.

He criticized speculation on the stock exchange and in commodity markets and called for an end to purchasing on margin to make sure "that every purchase is made with real money, cash down, on the nail." "It is an outrage that people should be making money, accumulating fortunes, by buying food grains, cocoa, coffee, sugar or materials essential to industry employment, not on the basis of need or use or want, but as a means of getting rich quick.

"It is an outrage that prices are sent rocketing by people who will never see, touch, taste, or handle the commodities in which they are dealing," he said.

Trash Fish Make 'Great' Sausage

ERIE, Mich. (AP) — Two investors say they have a great new food product, but the name leaves something to be desired. It's "trash fish" sausage.

David King and Samuel Barlotta say they have invented a food processing machine that can turn carp, suckers and other undesirable fish into a sausage for use in dozens of dishes.

"After it is processed it is as nice-looking as veal," said King, 47, a machine shop owner and part-time inventor.

Barlotta is a local restaurant owner.

The food processing machine has been approved by the Michigan agriculture department, said King, who has a patent pending.

Boon's Platform 'Business-Like'

Former North Saanich alderman Doug Boon said today he will "lead council in a business-like way," if elected mayor in the Nov. 17 municipal election.

Boon, who resigned his aldermanic position Friday to enter the mayoralty campaign, also said he will be in North Saanich more often than Mayor Trevor Davis has been.

In a telephone interview, Boon criticized Davis for being "absent 10 or 12 times this year."

Boon said his decision to seek the mayor's post had "absolutely no connection" with the dispute which arose last year between Davis and him regarding Wains Road.

When council debated extending the road, Davis pointed out that Boon owned property along the road.

Boon was first elected to council in 1970 and was re-elected in 1972.

Bunn Blasts Critic Teacher

Greater Victoria school board chairman Peter Bunn today labelled as "patently shallow" remarks made by a teachers' spokesman about a proposed plan for teacher salary bargaining in the province.

"Bot Mitchell is capable of much better than that," Bunn said the president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association.

Mitchell criticized the idea, approved unanimously at a weekend meeting of BC.'s school board salary chairmen, of having boards bargain together next fall on teachers' salaries.

If individual school boards are going to opt out of salary bargaining, he said, it could eventually lead to elimination of school boards and districts.

The provincial government may decide to economize in the running of schools and administer them in much larger units than the present districts, said Mitchell.

"We've been opposed to it in the past," Mitchell said of the idea of joint school board negotiating. "Nobody's given us reason to change our minds."

He disputed Bunn's statement that eliminating bargaining between a school board and its teachers will help eliminate discord in each district.

"The farther away the bargaining gets from the individual teacher, the more impersonal it becomes," said Mitchell.

A teacher in northern B.C. may feel more frustration because he has no say in salary negotiations taking place in Vancouver, he said.

Bunn denied that giving up their bargaining powers might mean the end of school boards.

A trustee's job is to try to get the best value from the educational dollar, he said, and that role would remain.

"One of the primary functions of a trustee is as an educational ombudsman," he added.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly today refused comment on the possibility of joint school board negotiations over teachers' salaries while current negotiations are going on, but said she knew the idea "has been simmering for quite a long time."

More Money For French

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — A series of 36 federal grants totalling more than $522,000 and supposedly aimed at giving both anglophone and francophone minority groups increased opportunity for exposure to their cultures actually contains only two grants worth a total of $6,500 to English - speaking groups.

A close look at the series of grants, announced by Secretary of State Hugh Faulkner and covering the months of June, July and August, shows that almost all the $522,000 went to French - Canadian groups.

Grants to French-Canadian minority groups included:

- $125,000 to the Societe Nationale des Acadiens in Moncton, N.B., an organization promoting francophone culture in the province.
- $105,000 to La Societe Franco-Manitobaina, St. Boniface, Man., for the "1973-74 francophone animation program."
- $69,000 to the Association Culturelle Franco-Canadienne de la Saskatchewan, Regina, Sask., "for the 1973-74 fiscal year for francophone animation work in the province."

Only two grants promote the cultures of English-speaking minorities in French-speaking Canada.

They are:

- $5,000 — one-third of a total $15,000 proposed grant — to the Quebec Farmers Association in Montreal for a social animation project for the rural English-speaking population of the province.
- $1,500 to the Quebec Young Farmers Association at St. Anne de Bellevue as the first instalment of a grant not to exceed $2,500 to train young Quebec anglophones in "leadership skills."

Invalid Runs TV By Mouth Power

LONDON (AP) — Lord Snowdon has designed a television set that can be operated by almost totally paralysed persons, using their mouths.

Snowdon, husband of Princess Margaret, designed the set for a water-skiing companion who recently had an accident that left him partially paralysed.

"He could not even move his hands," Snowdon told The Daily Mail.

"It was appalling and his morale was very low. I just felt I had to do something for him."

The set is connected to the patient by a tube with a microphone-like structure on the end. The patient, who is flat on his back in bed and wearing earphones, switches the set on or off, increases the volume or changes channels by sucking or blowing on the tube.

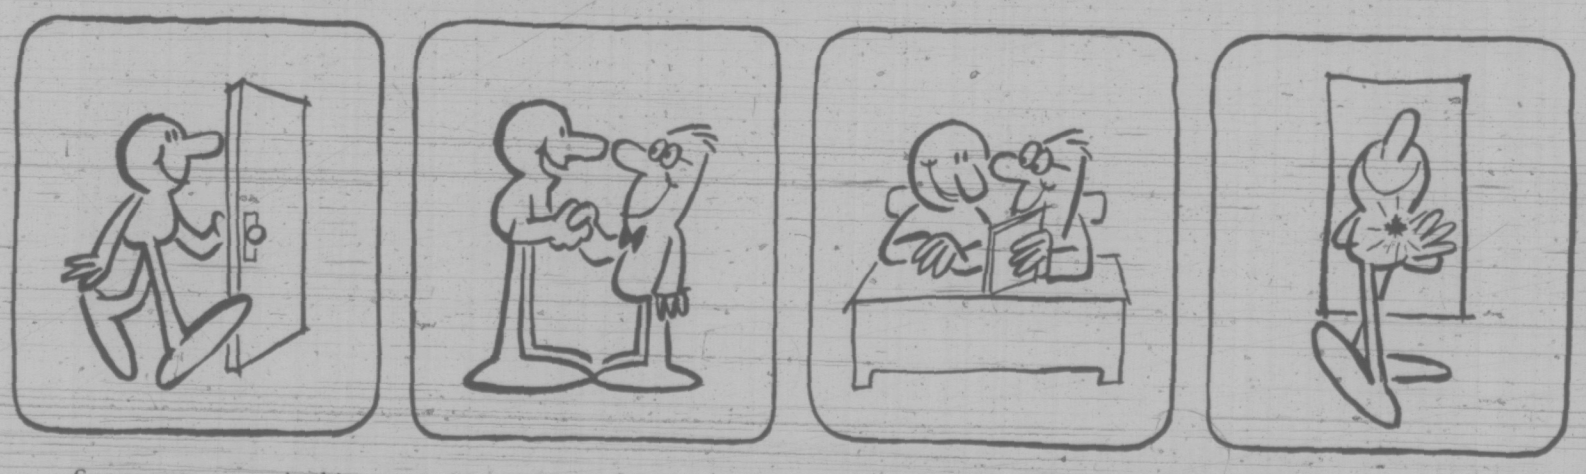
If you'd like to make our country your country, we'd like to help you by keeping Canada Immigration Centres open evenings and Saturdays and until midnight, October 15, 1973.



Suppose you were in this country by November 30, 1972, and have remained here since, as a visitor or without legal status.

During the sixty days of grace ending midnight, October 15, you may apply for permanent Canadian residence under very relaxed rules.

If you're living successfully in Canada, you're likely to qualify as a landed immigrant.

If you apply before midnight, October 15, you will not be penalized because you entered or remained in Canada illegally. And if your application fails, you may still appeal to an independent appeal board.

After midnight, October 15, you cannot qualify for landed immigrant status while in Canada, and have no appeal against deportation.

Before then, we'd like to help.

We'll go half-way. We'll even keep Canada Immigration Centres open to receive applications weekdays from 8:00 am to 8:00 pm, and Saturdays from 9:00 am to 5:00 pm. And on Monday, October 15, they'll stay open right up until the deadline at midnight.

You can walk in anytime, and pick up literature that gives full details, and no questions will be asked.

We invite you to make our country your country.

For further information, phone, write or visit your nearest Canada Immigration Centre, or, if there isn't one near you, your nearest Canada Manpower Centre. (Services given by Canadian Immigration Officers are free.)

Canada Immigration Centres are open to receive applications weekdays from 8:00 am to 8:00 pm and Saturdays from 9:00 am to 5:00 pm, and from 8:00 am to midnight Monday, October 15.

South Viets Slowly Win North Back

BONGSON, South Vietnam (WP) — South Vietnamese government forces, using air strikes, naval gunfire, artillery and elite troops, are waging a sustained campaign to wrest land and people from Communist control in the strategic northern districts of Binhdinh province, one of the most important in the country.

Caught by the January ceasefire agreement with little more than the shoulders of the main north-south highway under their control, the South Vietnamese are now pushing the Communists back and are beginning to repopulate villages that were lost in the north Vietnamese Easter offensive of 1972.

Acording to military officers participating in it, the campaign has several objectives: to insure the free flow of traffic on Highway One, the only road linking the country's northern provinces; to reopen fallow rice fields to cultivation and send home tens of thousands of refugees living in squalid camps or in shanties in Quinhon, the Binhdinh province capital; to retrieve civilians who stayed behind when the North Vietnamese took northern Binhdinh last year and to disrupt Communist supply lines.

In the past month, military officials say almost 20 square miles of formerly Communist-held territory have been seized by South Vietnamese troops driving westward from Highway One toward the forbidding mountains where the North Vietnamese are entrenched and eastward into traditional Viet Cong villiages along the coast.

About 2000 civilians, who either chose or were forced to stay on when their villages were taken by the North Vietnamese have been brought out by government troops. by government troops. Wrenched from their rice fields at harvest time, they are now camped in wretched huts along Highway One, more bewildered then angry, watching the war.

By comparison with other provinces, Binhdinh remains deeply troubled and marginally secure, as it has been for years. But American officials in Quinhon are almost euphoric in the current reports on developments here, saying that none of the political and military crises that might have been expected have developed and that the government military campaign has prevented the Communists from making any major moves.

American intelligence analysts say that the Communists have had little success in recruitment or in proselytizing in Binhdinh since the January ceasefire, and have failed in their campaign to induce persons living in government-controlled areas to go over to them. They also say that the North Vietnamese suffered such heavy losses in a big battle in Kontum Province to the west in June that they lack the strength for a serious campaign in Binhdinh.

These same analysts are also warning, however, that South Vietnam's contined incursions into territory that has been controlled by the Communists may provoke the North Vietnamese in countermeasures they would otherwise not attempt.

Binhdinh, a vast province on South Vietnam's central coast about 400 miles north of Saigon, was once patrolled by the U.S. First Air Cavalry Division and South Korea's Tiger Division. Now two regiments of South Vietnam's 22nd Infantry Division and three battalions of Rangers are doing most of the fighting, supplemented by a dozen battalions of provincial militia, bombs and napalm dropped by South Vietnamese air Force etc., and bombardment from naval ships patrolling the coast.

Their territorial gains have been made, according to South Vietnamese officers, after heavy fighting that has produced a "kill ratio" of only three to two. That is, the South Vietnamese claim to be killing three enemy soldiers for every two of their own who are dying, a sharp contrast to the usual claims of six or seven to one.

Government officials and military commanders in Binhdinh admit freely that it was Saigon's forces who took the initiative in the current campaign breaking a tense stability that had prevailed in the northern districts for a year or more, but say it was done out of necessity. This is not the way the fighting is described by official government spokesmen in Saigon, who claim that it is the North Vietnamese who are on the attack.

POISON EYED TO KILL SPILL

VANCOUVER (CP) — A spokesman for the Federal Environmental Service says the service is considering the use of a poisonous chemical agent to remove the last traces of oil from West Vancouver beaches.

The beaches were partially covered in oil following the collision last Tuesday of the British freighter Erawan and the Japanese container ship Sun Diamond. About 50,000 gallons of bunker fuel were spilled, but 30,000 gallons were contained around the British vessel soon after they collided.

Chris Hatfield, emergency co-ordinator for the service in last week's spill, said the decision would be made in a few days after thorough consultations with affected residents and federal fisheries officials.

"We would only use chemicals as a last resort if physical methods — such as peat moss and hosing — didn't do the job," he said.

"The residents would be asked to say which they give the higher priorty — clean rocks or marine life?"

Hatfield said the cleansing agent being considered was a chemical detergent called Diachem, which breaks down the oil into small droplets so they can be dispersed.

Aerial Photo May Hold Key To Halt Desert

WASHINGTON (WP) — Two American university professors here believe that they have stumbled across a way to halt desert encroachment that could bring long-term relief to millions of people living in the drought stricken Sahel region of West Africa.

Last June, the professors, Norman MacLeod and Darrell Randall, were studying photographs of the drought zone derived from data relayed from NASA's Earch Resources Technology Satellite, when they noticed a pentagon-shaped area in the midst of the desert where vegetation was mysteriously growing.

After determining that the green zone was located in eastern Niger, the two men travelled to the region last month and discovered that it was a French-run 250,000-acre cattle and sheep farm.

The secret to the swath of greenery was a simple barbed-wire fence, which for five years has kept the herds that belong to wandering nomads from overgrazing the ranch in the semi-desert lands of the Sahel, or border, of the Sahara Desert.

The Niger government and the French who run the ranch were totally unaware of the beneficial effects the sprawling ranch was having on the region's impoverished ecology.

But from the vantage point of a satellite orbiting 570 miles above the earth, it was clear that "something was going on down there that was extremely important so far as the desert was concerned," MacLeod remarked.

That "something" was the natural regeneration of vegetation as the grass was allowed to grow to maturity and go to seed before being devoured. This was achieved simply by rotating the grazing land for the farm's cattle. It was not necessary to seed the ranch.

The finding has important implications — not only for the success of NASA's experimental ERTS program, but also for plans now being laid to help six West African countries recover from the region's worst drought of the century.

The drought has driven home to local governments and foreign aid experts the urgency of stopping the southward advance of the world's largest desert, which already covers all of Mauritania and engulfs large marts of Mali, Niger and Chad. The Sahara is advancing along a 2,200-mile front at the rate of about 30 miles per year, according to several studies of the desert.

The satellite's findings suggest that the quickest, an possibly the cheapest, method of stemming the desert's steady expansion may be through enclosing vast stretches of land and introducing modern range management to the nomads.

To date, most projects aimed at turning back the desert have focussed on buildilng dams, digging thousanbds of wells or planting belts of trees across the Sahel.

The professors see a striking parallel between the pioneers who went across the American West ravaging the land by cutting down trees indiscriminately and overgrazing the plains, and the nomads with their large cattle and goat herds who are devastating the Sahel's delicate ecology. And in their view, the answer to West Africa's expanding desert is the same as it was in the American West — enclosure and controlled grazing.

They would have the nomads put their sheep, goats, cattle and camels on these ranches and end their destructive roaming across the desert and wasting Sahelian plains.

Such an enclosure plan would require a social revolution in the namads' life style, of but the two professors believe that the nomads' current plight makes this possible to carry out right now. The drought has wiped out the herds of hundreds of thousands of nomads, many of whom have become refugees in government-supported camps.

There is now talk of reconstituting these destitute nomads' herds, and, according to the professors, this could be tied to the establishment of enclosures and ranches.

"It's the time to do it," said Randall. "The nomads are willing to listen now, and they're more willing to undertake this kind of change and effort."

TRUSTEES 'DUPED' ON UNITED APPEAL

TORONTO (CP) — Members of the Toronto board of education who last week declined to endorse this year's United Way campaign were duped by a group called the Citizens Concerned About Danie, United Way campaign chairman.

The annual campaign began Monday despite warnings from the citizens' group questioning the way social services are operated.

"They offer no alternatives, no positive suggestions and so far only ask philosophical questions and hand out leaflets suggesting citizens do not give to the United Way," Daniel said Monday.

The citizens' group gained the support of the Toronto board of education which refused to endorse the campaing after hearing that fund officials had refused to debate policy with the group publicly.

MONEY IS GONE? INVESTORS TOLD

LONDON (Reuter) — Investors around the world who put millions of dollars into a mutual fund called Agrifund can conclude their money is lost forever, a London court was told Monday.

Edward Jules Markus, 38, a Canadian financial adviser living in London, pleaded not guilty to 42 counts alleging fraud and conspiracy when his trial opened here.

Prosecuting counsel William Forbes said investors from many countries, particularly West Germany, parted with $5.8 million for the Agrifund scheme operated through Markus.

The money was collected from investors in the period 1969 to early 1971.

"Since the early part of 1971 there has not been anything but the remotest hope of any of them getting anything back, let alone realizing the promise of capital growth and profit by which they were induced to invest in the fund in the first place," Forbes said.

The trial, which is being held here because Agrifund was operated through Markus from a London address, continues.

Workers Walk Out

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Workers at nearly 1,000 companies, including General Motors of Mexico, went on strike Monday because they did not get 20-percent salary increases recommended by a union-management panel. Government officials said unions representing 3.5 million workers reached agreement with management representatives last week for 20-per-cent across-the-board increases, but the raises still had to be negotiated individually with companies.

That's a pretty nifty little canoe I just bought. I suppose it was a bit of a splurge for a young married guy. But I figured I could afford to treat myself, because I got a bigger income tax refund than usual. The experts call it a tax deferment. I call it a nice little windfall.

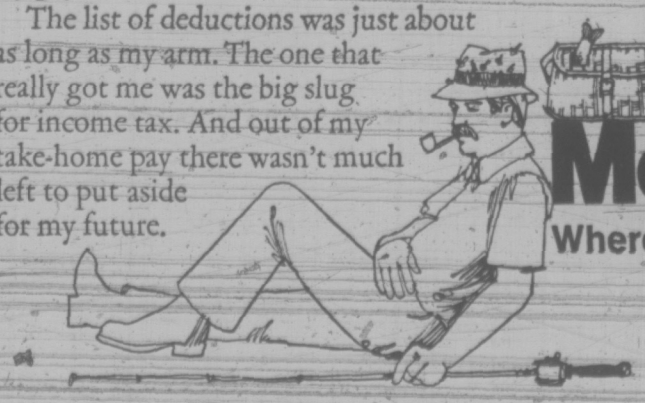
You see, I used to boil every time I got my pay.

The list of deductions was just about as long as my arm. The one that really got me was the big slug for income tax. And out of my take-home pay there wasn't much left to put aside for my future.



Sure, my company's got a pension plan that'll give us enough to live on. But what about those little extras that'll make retirement more fun?

Fortunately, I had a talk with a representative from Metropolitan Life who sure knew a thing or two about taxes.

For instance, Metropolitan Life has plans that you can register as retirement savings, and you get a tax break from the government. In fact, a Metropolitan Life representative can tell you if some of the plans you already have can be registered.

Nobody says you can stop paying taxes, but a Registered Retirement Savings Plan lets you deduct savings up to $4,000 a year from your taxable income. Then, when you retire and start taking the money out, you pay less tax because your income is lower.

The people at Metropolitan Life know taxes inside out. Funny thing is they've not only helped plan my future. They're also helping me get a tax break right now. I guess that makes pretty good sense. After all, at Metropolitan Life they say, "The future is now". And, for my money, they proved it!

Manning Defends North Railway

EDMONTON (CP) — Senator Ernest Manning, Alberta's Social Credit Premier from 1943 to 1968, Monday defended his government's creation of the Alberta Resources Railway in 1965 as "a sound decision."

Manning was testifying before the Grand Cache Commission, headed by N. R. Crump, former president of Canadian Pacific Railway, which is investigating the troubled history of the town 230 miles west of Edmonton.

Crump asked the former premier why the government not only built the railroad from Hinton north to Grande Cache, but also extended it 100 miles north to Grande Prairie.

"Perhaps with foresight much better than we realized at the time, we felt that costs were going to increase . . . and if we were going to build it we had to complete it rather than split it into two parts," responded Manning.

Conceived as a $30 million project, the price of the railway — constructed and operated for the government by Canadian National Railways — ballooned to more than $100 million.

The railway debt was increased last year when the Smoky River washed out 37 miles of track north of the McIntyre Porcupine Mines Ltd. operations at Grand Cache.

Manning stressed the importance of the railway as a transportation corridor even if capital expended in construction and maintenance was never recovered.

"I think it would not be inaccurate to compare this in a sense to many decisions governments have to make in the construction of highways, the majority of which never return to the taxpayer the capital expended."

"But they are done because it's necessary to have these transportation routes linking up communities where the volume of traffic is probably not enough to ever generate enough gasoline tax to pay maintenance, let alone capital."

Under examination by commission counsel Bill Stevenson, Manning explained his reasons for becoming a director of McIntyre Porcupine shortly after his resignation as premier in November, 1968.

"For a long time in this western part of Canada there has been a feeling that many companies engaged in the development of resources here, that have their headquarters in eastern Canada, have not been adequately represented by people from western Canada."

MINIMUM WAGE UP IN MANITOBA

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba's minimum wage rose Monday to $1.90 an hour from $1.75.

For employees younger than 18 years of age, the hourly minimum increased to $1.65 from $1.50.

At the same time, a scaled learner's rate, with its minimum of $1.60 an hour, was dropped.

The minimum wage increases, first announced last May, are the fifth approved since the NDP government came to power in 1969.

Hecklers Hit Lang

WEYBURN, Sask. (CP) — The new federal feed grains program ran into stormy weather here Monday when Justice Minister Otto Lang attempted to defend it before 175 people.

He had to contend with heckling and strongly critical questions from a vocal group of 25 persons in his audience and for the first time since he started his Prairie speaking tour Friday, had difficulty speaking at some points.

But the majority of the audience showed their support — or at least sympathy — for him by strongly applauding his rebuttal to the heckling.

Heavy applause also greeted critical comments like the one from a local feed grain producer: "I think I'm tired of subsidizing the fellow down east with millions of dollars."

In his speech before the questions started, Lang told farmers they have never had it so good as they are going to have it during the current crop year that ends next July 31.

It was "virtually certain" that the crop would bring $3.4 billion in sales, compared with the previous record $1.2 billion.

The figure did not include the value of that part of the crop which farmers would feed to their livestock without selling it, he said.

The record grain income would by itself move Saskatchewan out of the have-not category and make it one of the have provinces, he claimed.

HOSPITAL GETS $1M

EDMONTON (CP) — The spending of more than $1 million has been approved for upgrading facilities at the University of Alberta Hospital.

About half of the money — $500,000 — will be spent on upgrading patient accommodation areas and teaching facilities in the main hospital building. An additional $300,000 is to upgrade patient accommodation and to provide additional fire protection, such as emergency lighting and fire doors, in the Mewburn pavilion.

Workers Wanted

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Canada Manpower official Gerry Burns said Monday hundreds of jobs paying between $2.50 and $5 an hour are available in the Prince George area. Employment is unusually high for this time of year and Manpower is having difficulty finding enough workers for unskilled jobs out of town, mostly with forest companies and the railways, he added.

Nobody has to tell you.
Prices are rising.
On clothing.
Home furnishings.
Carpets. The cost of labour. The cost of every kind of material has gone up.
But what can you do?

Well, there is something. You can make sure that every dollar you spend from your budget for your family's clothes, or your home furnishings, or your new carpets, does double the work.

Be extremely careful about the fabric in the products you buy. Choose one that's not only always in fashion. But one that will give you the best value for your money.

There's only one miracle fabric that does all seven.

TORONTO POLICE KILLER SENTENCED TO HANG

TORONTO (CP)—A slight Montreal man stood between his lawyers Monday night and was told that he would be placed in solitary confinement until Jan. 28 when he would be "hanged by the neck until you are dead and may God have mercy on your soul."

The sentence was pronounced by Mr. Justice Frank Donnelly after an Ontario Supreme Court jury found Rene Vaillancourt guilty of capital murder in the fatal shooting of Metro Police Constable Leslie Maitland who was investigating a bank robbery in Toronto's east end.

Vaillancourt's conviction will be appealed, either by his lawyers or automatically as is required in all cases where the death sentence is imposed.

Canada's five-year moratorium on the death penalty ended last December but no one has been hanged for murder in this country in 11 years.

Crown Attorney A. O. Klein, who prosecuted Vaillancourt, also prosecuted Ron Turpin who had also shot a policeman and was one of two men hanged on Dec. 11, 1962, at Toronto's Don Jail.

Union Drive On

The B.C. Government Employees Union announced today it has launched an organizing drive among employees of the government-owned Insurance Corporation of B.C.

Union general secretary John Fryer said it is the first of several organizing drives aimed at agencies and commissions established by the government. Others include the B.C. Energy Commission, B.C. Development Corporation and the Land Development Commission.

Fryer said the membership potential among the ICBC and land and energy commissions is about 1,500. The BCGEU currently has a membership of 20,000 government employees.

No Saanich Police For Central Saanich

Saanich council Monday unanimously voted not to permit its police force to undertake policing duties for Central Saanich.

Central Saanich Mayor Archie Galbraith had asked if Saanich would be interested in its force providing full service.

In a report compiled by Police Chief Bob Peterson and comptroller treasurer R. F. Broughton, council was told such an agreement between the two municipalities was illegal.

The report quoted a statement by assistant municipal solicitor David Bolton. It read:

"I have considered the relevant provisions of the Municipal Act and am satisfied that the corporation has no power to conclude any such agreement, It would be open to Central Saanich to enter into an agreement with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police pursuant to section 177 for the joint maintenance and operation of a police force, to be established under a board of commissioners pursuant to section 672 of the act.

"Therefore, as we understand it, the Saanich police force, as we know it, would cease and be remolded into a "joint force" for maintenance and operation purposes, as opposed to simply providing "policing" to another municipality.

"The provisions of section 677 (1) provides a simple form of contract policing by the RCMP, but this does not appear to be the case for municipalities. Because of the provisions outlined heretofore, we may well find one or more of the alternatives mentioned legally unacceptable."

Three alternatives mentioned in the report were:

—A complete police service, similar as that given to Saanich residents.

—A partial service, given less than received by Saanich residents.

—A precint-style service with facilities, equipment and materials supplied by Central Saanich with Saanich assigning a number of trained men to the other municipality.

The report concluded that any such contract would not result in any advantage to Saanich or its police force.

Curtis said the police commission had been "pretty lukewarm to the idea" and outlined difficulties of providing police protection in Central Saanich which had "many fields between calls".

Ald. Frank Waring said Saanich was doing Central Saanich a favor by declining the invitation.

"I can see al the problems rising in the Metropolitan Board of Health coming here," he added, "With different members refusing to pick up their share of the tab."

Ald. Leslie Passmore said such a contract would be a "detrimental step not only to Saanich but also to Central Saanich." He pointed out that he was among those who, in earlier years, had urged Central Saanich residents to break away from Saanich and create their own municipality.

Ald. Alan Newberry said he was opposed to any police contract between the two municipalities, adding "If they want amalgamation, let's talk about that."

Ald. Edith Gunning pointed out that legally Saanich was unable to meet the request of Central Saanich.

Galbraith has also written the RCMP, asking if they would be interested in entering into a contract for policing services.

Central Saanich will hold a referendum Nov. 17 on the request of 60 per cent of the residents who have asked for consideration of alternative services to the municipality's own force.

Seventeen applicants have been interviewed for the position of police chief — open since the resignation of John Gelling.

Galbraith says the appointment of the new police chief will not be made until after the referendum has been held.

10 TOP MEN GAVE NIXON $6 MILLION

He got an additional $4,276,000 from 18 more super-contributors — those who gave at least $200,000 each.

Together, the 28 super-contributors alone gave $10,255,867 and accounted for more than one-sixth of the grand total of $60.2 million given by donors.

Another Budget Win

WASHINGTON (WP) — President Nixon won another victory on military policy Monday, as the Senate on a 51-to-47 vote killed a move to slash $500,000,000 from the $20.9 billion military procurement authorization bill. The bill was then passed, 91-to-7.

Defeat of the broad $500 million cut, sponsored by Sen. Hubert Humphrey (Dem.—Minn.), was another in a long line of narrow but clear defeats for Pentagon critics in more than a week of debate on the bill.

Humphrey, majorty leader Mike Mansfield (Dem.—Mont.), acting armed services committee chairman Stuart Symington (Dem.—Mo.) and many others demanded that the Pentagon budget be sharply trimmed in order to fund what they called urgent domestic programs.

DRUG MAN PROMOTED

Sgt. Dave Staples, head of the Victoria-based RCMP drug squad for Vancouver Island was promoted Monday to the rank of staff sergeant.

Staples became the first man above the rank of sergeant to head up the squad.

Public Hearings Set by Council

Saanich council Monday decided to hold a public hearing on the application of Harvey Lim of 4055 Cumberland to sell farm products at 5540 West Saanich Road.

The application is in line with a new bylaw prepared by Saanich which will permit the sale of farm products, both grown on the property and imported, in rural areas.

The bylaw restricts the sale of any manufactured items.

A public hearing is also planned on an application by Lake Hill Women's Institute to have the lot on which the hall is situated and a nearby vacant lot rezoned.

The two lots are now zoned for detached housing. The LWI intends to build a parking lot on the adjoining site and the rezoning is recommended by the municipality's Advisory Planning Commission.

A third public hearing was ordered on an application by Gorge-Esquimalt pre-school to run a school in St. Mark's church hall on Boleskine and Tennyson as soon as the hall has been upgraded.

Like the LWI hall, the APC recommended the change of zoning in order to bring it in line with its present use.

ALBERNI MAYOR TO QUIT

PORT ALBERNI — Mayor Fred Bishop, 58, the first mayor of the amalgamated city of Port Alberni and Alberni in 1967, said Monday he will resign at the end of the year.

Bishop comes from a family which has been involved in Alberni Valley affairs for a long time.

He was the grandson of the first mayor of the former city of Alberni. He was an alderman in Alberni for 10 years, and mayor of Alberni for six before his election as mayor of the amalgamated city.

His father also was an Alberni alderman.

20mph Limit On McNeill

Oak Bay council's streets and traffic committee approved a recommendation Monday night for a 20-mile-an-hour speed zone on McNeill Avenue between Foul Bay and Monterey.

The recommendation to reduce the speed limit from 30 miles an hour, was made after Police Chief John Green said he had no objections to the speed zone although the municipality did not have enough policemen to properly enforce it.

Pollution Head To Give Speech

Pollution control director William N. Venables will address the 40th annual meeting of the Pacific Northwest Pollution Control Association in Vancouver Oct. 10. About 500 scientists, engineers, educators, industrialists, government officials and treatment plant operators are expected to attend from Oregon, Washington, Idaho and British Columbia.

Chile Mine Intact

SANTIAGO (WP) — Chile's giant El Teniente copper mine suffered no visible damage during the coup last month and is now working full time, apparently without discord.

An extensive tour of the mine showed that all installations were operating, and the final product — the highly refined copper on which Chile depends for 80 per cent of its export earnings — is being shipped in increasing quantities.

According to the new managers appointed by the ruling military junta, the daily output of finished copper at El Teniente has reached 400 tons. Normal production is 600 tons daily, but output has yet to recover from the effects of the 76-day strike, which ended last June.

Interviews with miners at the site, 65 miles south of here and 7,800 feet up in the Andes Mountains, as well as with officials and residents of the mining city of Rancagua, indicated that Allende supporters offered little resistance to the military takeover.

When the first shift left the mine on Sept. 11, the day president Salvador Allende was overthrown, workers on the next shift were told to return to their houses. Emergency crews manned critical installations, as they do during the chronic strikes.

The mine was closed during the total curfew of the next two days, but it reopened under the new management led by several retired army engineers who had held key posts in the mine and had been mobilized to take charge.

Though a night time curfew continues, the miners are escorted to the mine to work in shifts around the clock.

Jorge Sibisa, appointed general manager of the mine by the junta last week, said that of the 13,000 workers, he had fired 316 who he said were political agents. Another 467 hired in the last six months were dropped also, he said. The work force was about 10,000 before Allende came to power.

In Rancagua, Lt.-Col. Christian Ackernecht said that more than 300 people were being held in the local jail. The only casualties in the coup were two civilians killed for failure to obey orders to halt during the curfew, he said. Col. Ackernecht, an army officer, and the police chief make up the junta running Rancagua province since the coup. The junta ruling the country, based in Santiago, is made up of the commanders of the army, air force, navy and national police.

Both Ackernecht and officials at the mine welcomed a visit by three foreign correspondents, although they came with no prior warning. Col. Ackernecht said he was also surprised that searches produced no arms caches in the mine.

El Tentiente is the largest underground copper mine in the world. Only the open-pit Chuquicamata mine in the northern desert is bigger in Chile.

Tommy Sands Alive and Well

HONOLULU (AP) — Tommy Sands, singer of million-seller records in the 1950s and 1960s, still can be seen in nightclubs. But not as a vocalist.

"I quit singing in 1969 and haven't sung a note since . . . And that includes in the shower," said Sands, who now conducts dinner and nightclub tours to various Waikiki Beach hotels.

Sands, 36 (centre with fan at side) quit show business in 1967 after his last movie, The Violent Ones. His last million seller was I'll Be Seeing You, recorded in 1966.

"Entertaining was becoming very boring . . .," he said when interviewed. "When it gets to that point, it's time to say aloha, so I said aloha."

Sands said he decided to live in Hawaii and, during his first year here, did nothing but relax. Following a short engagement at a local hotel a year later, he decided to call it quits. Then came the tour business.

"What I do is make all the arrangements for taking groups to dinner, then to a couple of shows in top nightclubs in Waikiki area.

"It's a people-to-people, one-to-one kind of job, and I love it . . ."

12-Fold Spending Hike In Treating U.S. Addicts

WASHINGTON (WP) — Since it "turned the corner" in the national battle against addiction, the U.S. federal government has begun spending 12 times as much treating drug users than it did when the narcotics epidemic was at its worst in 1969-1970.

It is spending seven times as much for anti-drug law enforcement activities, and there has been a 1,000 per cent rise in the total amount of U.S. money put out for prevention, treatment and endorsement — from $81 million in 1969 to $808 million this year.

The federal anti-narcotics bureaucracy has grown larger than ever before, with more than 2,000 special agents investigating criminal activies, compared to 300 a decade ago. In just two years, the number of federally funded treatment programs has risen from 36 to 360.

The investment, according to statistics offered by the component agencies of the federal war on drugs, has paid off.

The number of patients in treatment programs supported by the federal govenment has climbed from 16,000 to 72,000 in just two years. Presumably stimulated by the federal initiative, state and locally financed treatment programs have increased their capacity to over 150,000 patients.

Although is is practically impossible to accurately gauge the number of untreated heroin users, rough estimates by federal authorities indicate that the number of addicts may have declined from 625,000 in 1972 to 400,000 this year.

In New York, the leading city of addiction, the Drug enforcement administration estimated there were more than 300,000 narcotics addicts in 1972. This year there are 274,000, according to the DEA.

In Washington — traditionally another leader — the number of known new addicts who sought help fell from a peak of 2500 in 1969 to only 100 in 1972, according to the D.C. narcotics treatment administration. The number of heorin overdose deaths fell from a high of 14 a month during the peak to only one during the past five months.

Another indicator of progress in the anti-drug battle is the availability of heroin, cocaine and marijuana.

In the last fiscal year, federal narcotics agents were able to seize 309 pounds of heroin from the domestic market, compared to 995 pounds in fiscal year 1972. The take of cocaine fell from 443 to 239 pounds, and of marijuana from 47,827 to 26,953 pounds.

As a result of the scarcity of the drug, the price of heroin has more than tripled since 1969, while the purity has dropped to an all-time low of two per cent in some markets. As the drug becomes even more scarce, the dealers are expected to dilute it even further with adulturates, drug authorities say.

Another sign that heroin use has declined significantly is the rate of serum hepatitis, which last year was a fifth of what it was in 1971. Hepatitis frequently is transmitted by sharing dirty hypodemic needles.

In the face of their documented achievements in controlling the heroin epidemic, the federal drug agencies this year plan to spend $551 million in treatment and prevention and $257 million in law enforcement — up, respectively, from $46 million and $35 million five years ago.

In an interview, Dr. Robert L. Dupont, director of the U.S. special action office for drug abuse prevention, said his prevention and treatment budget is only "roughly adequate to hamile the need. Now we've got resource allocations consistent with the total problem."

New Deal Evolving For U.K. Labor

By DAVE THOMAS

LONDON (CP) — Britain last year limped through the worst series of labor stoppages since the crippling General Strike of 1926 and now all sides seem to have had enough.

The loss of nearly 24 million working days has eroded the tradition of labor conflict and prompted moves toward a new relationship that would not only keep the wheels turning but end forever the isolation between boardroom and shop floor.

The dominat issue in British industrial relations has become industrial democracy, or worker participation. Since the principle is accepted by nearly all union, business and government leaders, the present debate involves its form rather than its inevitability.

The hope is that the alienation of a worker from his job will fade as he has — or feels he has — more say about how he does it.

The Conservative government, historically sympathetic to business, is seeking advice on proposed changes in company law aimed at giving employees a share in the management process.

The Daily Mirror, whose circulation of 4.5 million makes it the biggest English-language daily in the world, recently completed a week-long campaign in favor of worker participation with an appeal in thick black type: "This isn't a private war — we're all on the front line."

What in practice does industrial democracy mean?

The three formal structures involved, singly or together, are:

Supervisory Board: The senior body of a two-tier system of management. Worker representatives would be elected or appointed to the board.

Management Committee: The executive level of the two-tier structure. Its fulltime officers would be appointed by the supervisory board.

Factory Council: A group of supervisors and workers which decides detailed plant procedures but is not involved in financial matters or major policy planning.

Much of the interest in Britain has focused on existing participation schemes on the Continent. It is best developed in west Germany where the two-tier system has been required by law in all major enterprises for more than 20 years.

Union members in the coal and steel industry elect half the members of their company's supervisory board and in other sectors of German industry the unions command a one-third representation.

Belgium, Luxembourg, Holland, Austria, Sweden, Denmark and Norway all have some from of compulsory worker participation but in France, where Communist union leaders dominate the scene, the idea has not gained much ground.

Factory councils have been legally required for some time in all large French firms but the law is generally ignored because most union leaders are opposed to workers and capitalists coming together. Militant unions concentrate their campaigns on worker ownership rather than mere participation.

Fall Arts Program Organizes

The artistically inclined of all ages can find something of interest and value in the fall arts program now accepting registrations at the Emily Carr Arts Centre.

Starting date is Oct. 15 for courses that include, for adults, painting, drawing, basic print making and new ideas in sculpture; for teenagers, drawing and painting, and Saturday morning classes for children.

A workshop in the making of Christmas cards and gifts will start in November. This one is for adults and so is the life drawing workshop which will take place Monday evenings, from 7:30 to 9:30.

Some of the class work will probably be included by a CBC crew who will come to Victoria to make an Emily Carr documentary in a few weeks' time.

For information and registration, phone 652-1908 day or evening.

Mackenzie Pipeline 'Essential'

Western Canada will have a natural gas shortage before the end of the decade unless the Mackenzie Valley pipeline is built, V. L. Horte of Toronto, president of Canadian Arctic Gas Study Ltd., said in Victoria Monday.

He said each year demand is catching up with supply and will surpass known reserves in the late 1970s unless Arctic gas becomes available.

Horte, addressing the conference of provincial mines ministers at The Empress, said this shortage would increase year by year in the 1980s without the Mackenzie pipeline.

He said to be most efficient, the proposed pipeline should tap the 300 trillion cubic feet of Alaska natural gas as well as the 100 million cubic feet of Canadian Arctic supply.

The pipeline would make up any Canadian supply deficit and would leave surplus gas for sale in the United States.

It would be possible but not advisable to carry only Canadian gas for distribution to Canadian customers through the pipeline.

"A pipeline which doesn't have access to U.S. markets and Alaska gas would almost certainly be delayed well beyond the time that Canadians will require northern gas to meet our own needs," he said.

"In effect, Alaska gas presents Canada with a unique opportunity to substantially reduce the cost."

He said Canada should make an early decision to construct a joint pipeline, because El Paso Natural Gas is conducting an $11 million feasibility study which calls for a pipeline across Alaska to tidewater where gas would be liquefied and shipped by tankers to U.S. markets on the west coast.

"Faced with excessive delay of a pipeline through Canada, the United States would be hard pressed to go ahead with an all-American (natural gas) system. In turn, this would delay Canadian access to Mackenzie Delta reserves beyond the early 1980's.

He said Canadian Arctic Gas will apply to Canadian and U.S. governments this year to construct a $5 billion pipeline from Alaska's North Slope through the Mackenzie Valley to markets in Canada and the United States.

The pipeline would be buried for 1,200 miles in Arctic terrain with refrigeration units every 50 miles to keep the gas below 32 degrees and prevent melting of permafrost.

The buried pipeline would have almost no impact on the environment.

In the near term, the project would create more employment than could be filled by available northern workers, he said.

After construction is completed, only a few hundred direct jobs would remain in the north but this would create several thousand subsidiary jobs because of a multiplyer effect of pipelines.

Horte said the 3,000 people directly employed on present Alberta pipelines create employment for 30,000 people in various support jobs.

Arctic Gas has spent more than $35 million to date in research on the pipeline project, including $7.5 million for three northern test pipelines.

Financing the research is a consortium of 27 companies, 10 of them Canadian.

Executive offices of Canadian Arctic Gas Study Ltd. are in Toronto with an engineering study office in Calgary with about 100 employees.

The pipeline would be 2,600 miles long and have a capacity of 4 billion cubic feet of gas per day.

Horte said Canadians could be thankful that all their petroleum and natural gas problems so far have resulted from abundance rather than shortages.

Proxmire relaxes after attack

Proxmire Rebuffs Attackers

WASHINGTON (WP) Sen. William Proxmire (Dem. Wisc.), who out-talked two would-be armed robbers a year-and-a-half ago, Monday night successfully fought off a second set of assailants.

"I was walking home at about 7 p.m. and was at about Second St. and Massachusetts Avenue (about two blocks from Capitol) when two kids came up behind me and said 'give us your money,'" Proxmire told a reporter.

"I turned around and the one who asked for my money had a cap pistol in his hand. The other had a stick. I said, 'you must be out of your mind.'" related the Senator, "and the kid who had the stick whammed me on the leg and the side.

"The logical thing would have been to run away, I can out run most of those kids," said the senator, 57, a physical fitness enthusiast who jogs to work every day.

"But I was mad," he continued, and "I grabbed for the stick and I pulled the kid out into the street. I held out my hand to slow down one of the cars (passing by). The kids must have figured (a car would stop), and they took off."

Familiar Glow In Scots Show

By MAX LOW
Times Staff

Kim is six.

Blonde hair, wide blue eyes, grade one, and so persuasive.

Scottish show? Sure, why not. As probably the only one of Scottish descent not to have seen the White Heather Concert in Victoria — and it's been coming here for 24 years — why not give it a go?

And so, with Kim so lovely in her Black Watch tartan kilt and glistening eyes, you do.

As you take your seats, the Adeline Duncan Dancers are giving a display of jigs and reels and Kim's night is made already. That's what she had come to see.

Unfortunately, as you respond to little digs in the ribs and queries as to "when are they going to dance again, Daddy?" you glance quickly down the program and you realize they aren't.

"Oh, we've travelled across Canada before, with highland dancers," said tour manager Jimmy Warren, now in his 11th year with the show. "They've proved popular, too, but we didn't bring any this time."

Well, never mind. You console Kim and you both settle back to enjoy the familiar music and songs.

Most of it was, in fact, familiar. There was little new Monday night at the Playhouse. But then, does there need to be? Perhaps this is the charm of Scottish music. a feeling of it all coming back; a sort of involvement. A packed Playhouse crowd of 837 thought so, anyway.

And the cast, star Andy Stewart, accordianist Jimmy Blue, singers Anna Desi and Alex Morrison, pianist Mark Simpson and particularly comic Ron Dale, soon got the audience involved.

Stewart, Scotland's most famous entertainer of the last decade who is in his 10th year with the show, quickly got the crowd in a sing-a-long frame of mind with a rousing version of "I Belong to Glasgow."

In between, Blue got the audience tapping its toes with some fine playing and Miss Desti, an attractive soprano, ann tenor Morrison charmed with songs like the rollicking "Blaze Away" and "Goodbye" from the musical White Horse Inn.

But it was comedian Dale, who stars in his own TV show Melody Inn, who stole the night.

After easily getting laughs and cleverly drawing the audience into his often faintly-blue jokes, Dale showed his versatility by playing "Annie Laurie" on a miniature button accordion and then by playing "Scotland the Brave" and incredibly even the moving "Amazing Grace" on the bagpipes!

"Amazing," muttered many as they left the theatre.

UIC LEVY HIKE LIKELY IN '74

OTTAWA (CP) An increase in employee-employer contributions to the unemployment insurance account is likely in 1974 because of rising living costs and deficits incurred by the government program.

But a government spokesman said Monday there is no definite indication yet whether the amounts will be raised or how much any increase will be.

Higher costs of living and the desire of government to meet unemployment insurance deficits will likely lead to increased levies on workers and their employers, he said.

This year, employees under the plan pay $1 per $100 weekly insurable earnings up to a maximum of $1.60 a week, while employers contribute another $1.40 weekly per $100 insurable earnings up to a maximum of $2.24.

This was an increase from 1972, when employees fully insured under the plan paid 90 cents per $100 and employers added another $1.26.

Five Stab Wounds On Body, MD Says

Five stab wounds were found on the body of a 51-year-old Victoria man killed in a Dallas Road boarding house last March, a B.C. Supreme Court jury here was told Monday.

Dr. Garth Walther, director of pathology at Victoria General Hospital, was a Crown witness at trial for Roydon Gaylord Morrison, 42, of 132 Dallas, charged with the March 14 capital murder of Wallace Ormar Stevenson, 51, of the same address.

Walther, who examined Stevenson's body, said the man died as a result of a wound, two and a half to three inches deep, which severed the pulmonary artery.

Severance of "this major vessel" led to "massive, fatal hemorrhage," the doctor testified.

Crown Prosecutor Ken Murphy showed the doctor a knife and asked if the wounds could have been caused by such an instrument.

It would be "capable of inflicting the wounds which I have described," said Walther.

Measuring the blade, defence counsel Dermod Owen-Flood suggested the knife wasn't large enough to cause a three-inch wound.

The doctor told the court a 2½-inch blade could cause a three-inch wound depending on which part of the body was stabbed.

Owen-Flood also suggested the wound could have been self-inflicted.

"You can't entirely exclude that possibility," said Walther adding it was unlikely.

Earlier, Victoria police Constable John Smith told of being called to the scene at 4:40 p.m. He said he found Stevenson seated in the dining room and noticed blood on his chest.

While he was searching Stevenson, Smith said, Morrison attempted to enter the room and eventually had to be forced out.

The constable said Morrison returned shortly afterwards, was even more insistent on entering, and "a bit of a scuffle" occurred as he was ejected.

Questioned, Smith said he recalled seeing six other people in the house and that three of them appeared to be intoxicated.

Drug Fine

READING, England (AP) Penelope Rippon, 19, daughter of British Environment Minister Geoffrey Rippon, was fined £20 ($48) Monday for unlawful possession of marijuana. Miss Rippon, an art student, pleaded guilty to committing the offence at a pop festival here Aug. 26.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 23-year-old Sooke resident was given six months' probation in provincial court Monday for possession of marijuana when stopped by police Sunday on West Saanich Road.

'Vague' Farm Bill Attacked

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Drawn-out criticism of the Farm Income Assurance Act occupied most of the debate in the legislature Monday as opposition members charged the legislation is too vague, too all-encompassing and too powerful.

The debate was reminiscent of reaction to the Land Commission Act last spring when the opposition said they supported the principle of the bill but could not agree to the actual legislation.

Over and over Monday, opposition spokesmen said they supported the principle of assuring farmers a decent living from their labors but again and again they objected to its "vagueness".

Social Credit members said they would support second reading of the bill with "mixed emotions" while the Liberals and Conservatives told the house they would not support it.

In an effort to have the bill re-drafted with more specific legislation, Conservative leader Scott Wallace (Oak Bay) moved an amendment to have the bill re-introduced in six months.

The motion was defeated 44 to 5 with the Socreds joining the government.

Debate was adjourned without approval of second reading.

In explaining the bill Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich said it was purposely vague to allow the government to set up different guaranteed income programs for different commodities.

The bill states that the cabinet can establish any program, arrangement or scheme "that provides in any way for the paying of moneys to, or guaranteeing, or assuring of income for, such farmers or classes of farmers in the province as the (cabinet) shall designate."

While Stupich told reporters last week the government planned to institute a guaranteed income insurance scheme for farmers, he told the house his department would have to first have the enabling legislation in order to work out "commodity by commodity" a program for farmers.

Don Phillips (SC-South Peace River) started off for the official opposition by saying the legislation "enabled" the minister to do anything he wished and spend any amount of money he wished.

"It's not legislation at all," Phillips said. "All we are told in Bill 9 is the government position with regard to farm income stablization."

He charged Stupich "doesn't know exactly how to implement his policy" and therefore made the legislation deliberately too vague to give the government a "wide scope of power."

"There's no mention of what it's going to cost the province of B.C."

The Socred critic said he feared an insurance program would be forced on all farmers, taking the incentive away from those who now run profitable farms.

Liberal agriculture critic Allan Williams (West Vancouver-Howe Sound) said the government should withdraw the bill and re-introduce it with more specific explanations.

Wallace and other members of the house said the bill reminded them of the Land Commission Act.

"We strongly supported the principle of preserving farmland and we strongly support the principle of giving a guaranteed income to farmers," Wallace said.

"It's like being in favor of motherhood," he added.

But, he said, one of the greatest fears of the Land Commission "was the tremendous power the government was giving to non-elected people" and the new legislation would also give great power to government appointed agencies.

NDP backbencher Gerry Anderson (Kamloops) spoke in support of the bill and adjourned the debate. Discussion of the bill may resume today or later.

Four other agriculture bills of a minor nature were earlier unanimously approved for second reading.

The bills were: amendments to the Veterinary Medical Act which, among other points, allows laymen on veterinary inquiry committees; amendments to the Agricultural Land Development Act to allow the minister of agriculture to delegate authority in administering the act; changes to the Milk Industry Act to give the government control over the movement of retail packaged milk; and changes to the Oleomargarine Act which mean margarine will no longer be considered a "substitute" for butter.

Barrett Suspects CP, CN Withholding Rail Cars

Premier Barrett has accused the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways of not co-operating to relieve pressure on northern industry caused by the shortage of freight cars on B.C. Railway.

If the federal railways are deliberately withholding rail cars, the provincial government will take "appropriate" action, Barrett said during question period in the legislature Monday.

He was replying to a question by Ed Smith (SC—North Peace River) who has repeatedly raised the issue.

Barrett said the BCR has leased 500 freight cars from Foss Launch and Tug of Vancouver and has already taken delivery on 100 cars.

"We could use 2,000 easily," he told reporters later.

BCR's rail car production plant in Squamish will not be completed until March.

He said his suspicions have been growing "as evidence comes in" that CN and CPR are not helping the provincial railway and added the province "won't be pushed around."

Barrett, who is also president of the railway, added he will make further statements in the House this week on the situation and agreed it was critical enough that layoffs may occur in northern industry and agriculture because of the shortage of transport vehicles.

Tories Ask Fund

A "leadership fund" to pay for campaign and travelling expenses incurred by the party's leader, has been recommended by the Progressive Conservative Student Federation executive.

John McVie, provincial vice-president of the organization, said the recommendation was made to the "senior" party after an executive meeting at the University of Victoria.

"Funds should be collected from each and every member of the Progressive Conservative Party in B.C.," said McVie, adding that candidates should not have to pay out of their own pockets in getting elected.

The executive also passed a motion not to support the idea of amalgamation or coalition with the Social Credit Party or any other provincial party "at this time," said McVie.

The student federation is made up of members from the University of B.C., Langara College in Vancouver, and UVic.

RICKINSON WINS APPLAUSE

Ray Rickinson, a civil servant for 45 years, was given a rousing all-party tribute in the legislature Monday, as he resigned as deputy minister of human resources.

Minister of Human Resources Norman Levi began the afternoon sitting of the house by tracing Rickinson's career from 1929 when he began as a $15 a month junior clerk.

He served through six governments and 10 cabinet ministers and finally became deputy minister in 1956. Levi said he was the longest serving deputy in Canada.

The three opposition parties also expressed their appreciation of Rickinson's work.

Rickinson, who is retiring early, will be replaced by J. A. Sadler, former associate deputy minister. Sadler's appointment as acting deputy minister was effective Monday.

The new associate deputy minister is E. L. Northrup, a former executive member of the B.C. Association of Social Workers and recently a policy consultant to the minister.

Levi also announced a major restructuring of the senior administration of his department through the establishment of three branches — social services and income security programs, long range planning and social research, and community services — to replace the former divisions of programs and operations.

R. J. Burnham, former director of operations will be executive director of the community services branch, and T. D. Bingham, former director of programs, will direct the long range planning branch. No director has been chosen yet for the third.

New Lord Mayor

LONDON (AP) — Sir Hugh Wontner, 65, boss of a group of British luxury hotels including the Savoy and Claridges, was elected lord mayor of London Monday. He succeeds to the post in November.

Target: Student Expenses

Education Minister Eileen Dailly says she will announce policy in the spring aimed at providing equal opportunity for students facing rising school costs.

She told the legislature Monday in reply to question from Harvey Schroeder (SC—Chilliwack) that policy to alleviate the problems of rising enrolment and supply costs in education would be introduced when the budget comes down in the spring session of the House.

Also during question period, Dailly told Liberal leader David Anderson (Victoria) that money to support extra-curricular activity at the B.C. Institute of Technology would be paid by the provincial government.

Anderson had said that because of funding problems one of the BCIT sports teams would be forced to drop out of its league.

Master Charge. The world's most credit card will

More people carry Master Charge than any other credit card in the world. Because it's welcome at well over a million places in North America, Great Britain, Europe, Latin America, Africa and Asia. And Master Charge uses the same symbol all over the world. In the U.S.; for example, Master Charge looks exactly the same as it does in Canada. Which means that your card will be instantly recognized. And welcome. And that can be very important to you when you're far from home.

Welcomed soon by Air Canada, Birks, Holiday Inns, Bata Shoes, Tip Top Tailors, Tilden, Sayvette Discount Stores, Reitman's, CP Air, Hilton Hotels, W.H. Smith, CN Trains, Towers Stores, Lindor Shops, Canadian Pacific Hotels, Shell, Nordair, Air France, United Airlines, and Bowrings to name a few. And by the time you get your Master Charge card, there'll be thousands more.

It's better than a shopping card or a travel card because it's bigger than both,

Master Charge can offer you more than any one individual shopping card can. Because it's welcomed at specialty stores, drug stores, clothing stores, hardware stores, discount stores, hotels, restaurants, airlines, and hundreds of other establishments right across the country. And it doesn't end there, like some credit cards do. Because when you're travelling, you'll find your Master Charge card works just as well around the world for hotels, airlines, restaurants, car rentals, shopping, and all the things you use it for at home. Not to mention that when and wherever you need money, you just present your card at any of the more than 20,000 banks around the world that welcome Master Charge, and you can get cash to the full extent of the unused portion of your credit limit.

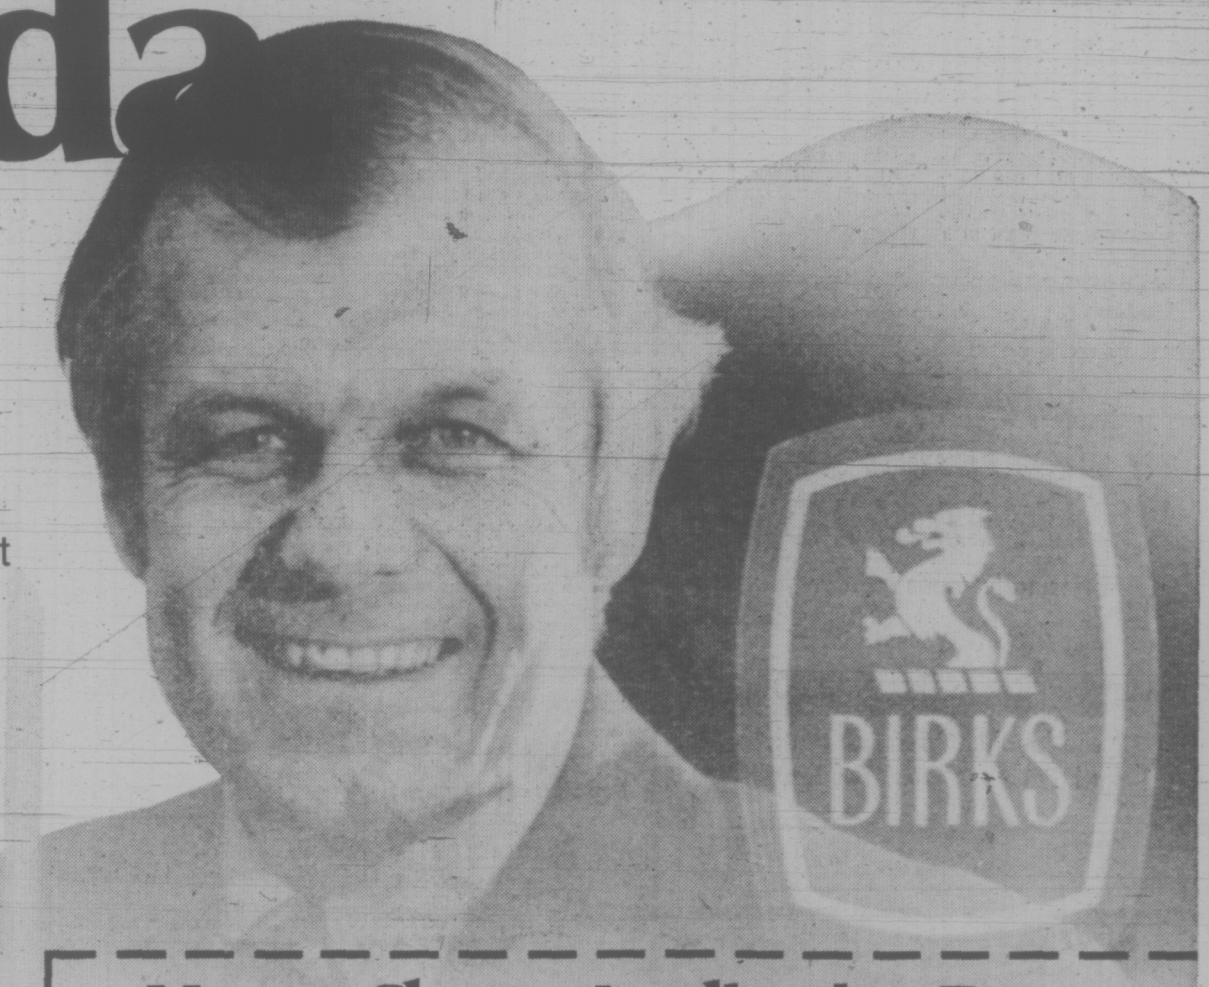
It's good for shopping, entertaining, travelling, cash advances, and budgeting, too,

Master Charge can buy almost everything you need. Clothing, shoes, hardware, sporting goods, automotive supplies, appliances, and furniture. And, sometimes, it can let you take advantage of a bargain when you don't have the cash.

Master Charge can take you to dinner at the best place in town. It can get you tickets for a play. It can buy you a barbecue and let you stay home.

Master Charge can fly you to Paris on Air France and let you stay at the Hilton. Or take you to a meeting aboard a CN train and put you up for the night at a Holiday Inn. Or buy you a tankful of gas at a Shell station and give you a ride in the country.

welcome soon be welcome in Canada



Master Charge can even get you cash. It allows you as much as your credit limit at all Bank of Montreal and Provincial Bank branches in Canada. And at more than 20,000 banks around the world.

Master Charge can help you with your budget. With a single monthly statement that accounts for purchases a lot better than your memory can. And lets you write a single cheque instead of a dozen.

And it doesn't have to cost you a cent.

There's no membership fee. In fact, there's no cost at all if you pay for your purchases within twenty-five days of your statement date (except for cash advances). But if you wish, you can also take advantage of an extended payment option.

You're welcome to join at the Bank of Montreal, the Provincial Bank of Canada, or wherever you see the welcome sign.

No, you don't have to be a customer of either bank. Just ask for an application form at any branch. Or, ask any merchant who displays the Master Charge symbol. Or, even simpler, send us the application form that's conveniently located to the right. And, by the way, welcome to Master Charge.

Brilliant Repartee At the Dinnertable

I am always amazed to read magazine interviews with famous people who claim that their sparkling wit and impressive conversational ability are a direct result of the brilliant intellectual dinner-table repartee they enjoyed as a child.

"Mummy and Dad loved nothing better at table than a spirited debate on religion or the theatre. It was all so gay," they muse. "Even two-year-old Cedric took part." (Personally I have known several two-year-olds, and I am a bit skeptical over the quality of Cedric's participation. There is nothing especially uplifting in watching someone shove string beans into his ear.)

The only real spirited dinnertime debate I can recall over the past 10 years involved whether or not Brussels sprouts taste like paint remover. And rather than elevating the conversation to a constructively philosophical level, I find myself delivering an endless stream of banal one-liners such as "Do you call those hands clean? I said to wash! With soap!" "Move your milk glass away from the edge of the table" and "Chew with your mouth closed, for heaven's sake!"

Goodness Knows I'd enjoy a spirited debate on religion or the theatre, but whenever I attempt to present my theories on existentialism as exhibited in early 19th-century drama, one of the children invariably begins eating mashed potatoes with his fingers.

I suppose that, in spite of it all, our children may eventually become famous enough to be interviewed. At which time I expect them to say "Actually, I owe my entire social success to Mummy and Dad. Granted, I had to acquire my sparkling wit and impressive conversational ability in the street, but at least they taught me not to throw bread."

Pumpkin Pleases

Tempt Palate With Autumn Pies And Breads

"Nothing as loving as something from the oven," . . . especially if the something is spicy, sweet pumpkin pie or rich, moist pumpkin bread. You can be sure that the Indians who first grew pumpkins in tre early days would marvel at the wonderful array of foods which can be made from this golden, vine-ripened fruit.

Pumpkin alone has quite a bland flavor, but it can be delightfully perked up in baked products by mixing and matching ingredients such as brown sugar, honey, cinnamon, nutmeg, allspice, cloves, raisins, dates and nuts. These simple additions can transform fresh, cooked and mashed pumpkin or canned pumpkin into tempting puddings, cookies, muffins, cakes, custards, breads and, of course, pies.

The next time you make a pumpkin pie, why not make several and freeze them for later use. Pumpkin pies may be frozen either baked or unbaked but tests conducted by Food Advisory Services, Agriculture Canada, indicate that it is best to freeze them unbaked as the pastry becomes soggy when baked pies are frozen.

To freeze unbaked pies, prepare your favorite recipe and set them in the freezer until the filling is frozen (about 3 hours), then wrap in a moisture-proof material and seal. To serve, bake frozen pies at 400 degrees F for one hour, reduce oven to 350 degrees F and continue baking until the pie is set (about 20 minutes). If you prefer to freeze the pies after baking, they may be thawed in the refrigerator for six to seven hours or overnight.

PUMPKIN BREAD

3c cups sifted all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon ground cloves
4 lightly beaten eggs
2 and two-thirds cups sugar
2 cups canned or cooked pumpkin
Two-thirds cup water
½ cup oil
Two-thirds cup chopped walnuts
Two-thirds cup raisins.

Sift first six ingredients. Beat eggs, sugar, pumpkin, water and oil. Make a well in centre of dry ingredients and add liquid ingredients at one time. Mix only enough to moisten. Mix in walnuts and raisins. Pour into two greased 9x5-inch loaf pans. Bake one hour at 350 degrees F. Wrap and store 24 hours before serving. Makes two loaves.

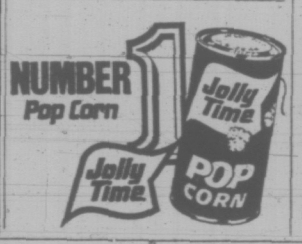
What do you wear when the weather is nippy but not cold enough to bundle up in a coat? A long version of the versatile vest is a good answer. The one pictured is a unisex design that's easily made for him or her. Here's how:



1. Your fabric can range from heavy cotton to wool.

2. Work out the measurements of the vest to give you an idea of how much fabric to buy. First draw the vest design on large sheets of brown wrapping paper to establish a pattern. (You can also draw the measurements directly on the wrong side of the fabric.) If you like, make a pattern out of inexpensive fabric.

3. The width of the vest is measured from end of one shoulder to the end of the other. Add two inches to each side (4 inches total).

4. The length of the vest is measured from the base of the back neck to your desired length. Allow for bottom hem.

5. These measurements give you the total back vest area.

6. To establish the neckline, measure 1 inch down from the top width and mark with a straight line (Line O).

7. Place a dish or bowl centred on this line, and mark.

8. To establish the shoulder lines, measure 3 inches down from the top width and mark with a straight line (Line X).

9. Draw a straight line from each neck point (Z) to each end point on the 3-inch line.

10. The front vest is in two sections. Follow the same measurements for the back vest but add 1 inch more to the width. Compensate for this extra inch by extending the neck (bowl) ½ inch on both sides.

11. The neckline is a V shape that starts from the Z neck point to as far down as you determine. The V point should be exactly centred.

12. Once you establish the front measurements, cut the pattern in half.

13. To cut the belt, fold a piece of fabric in half and cut one end into a point.

14. To sew the vest, pin the two shoulders of the front vest to the back vest, right sides facing, and stitch.

15. At this point determine if you wish the vest to be lined.

16. For a lined vest, cut a lining using the same pattern for the front and back best.

17. Assemble the lining the same as you did the vest.

18. Place the vest and the lining together, right sides facing.

19. Sew the two together starting at a point on the bottom back vest and continuing to sew around until you return to the bottom back vest, leaving 5 inches unsewed. Sew ½-inch seams.

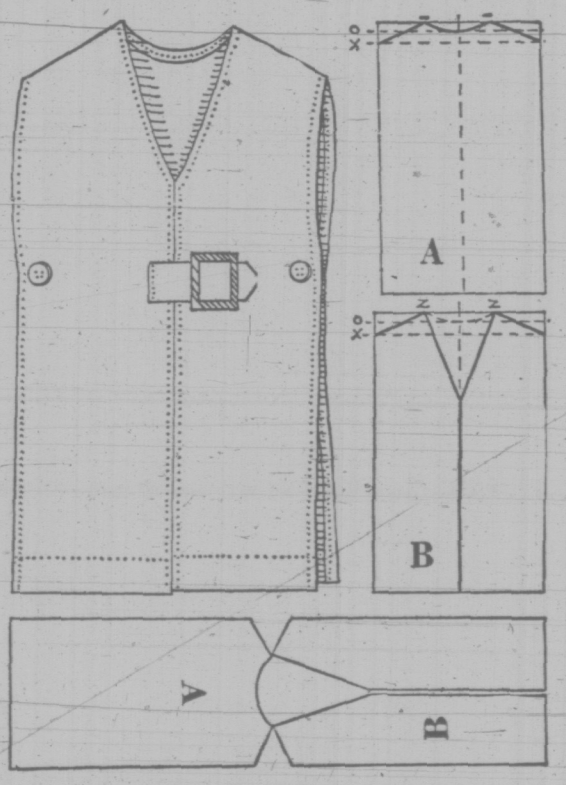
20. Snip small slits in the hem around the neck and V.

21. Turn the vest inside out. Sew the open seam closed.

22. Iron the vest.

23. For an unlined vest, sew a ½-inch hem on all raw edges.

24. Sew the belt, right sides facing, along the straight side and the pointed end. Turn inside out.



Tried and True Passes the Test

By MARY MOORE

Here is the story straight from the boss's mouth.

In late October 1972 I was given eight pounds of green tomatoes. I was occupied with Christmas baking and did not have time to use them.

I handed them to Maureen along with a tried and true recipe and asked her to use them following the recipe in general but to make some changes. This column is being written on November 20, 1972 to be used in October 1973. How's that for advance preparation?

The pickle is so good I can eat it by the forkful. It is inexpensive.

NEW GREEN TOMATO PICKLE

8 lbs. small green tomatoes thinly sliced
8 medium onions thinly sliced
½ c. salt
4 tsp. mustard seed
4 tsp. allspice berries
4 tsp. celery seed
4 tsp. whole cloves
4 tsp. peppercorns
4 tsp. dry mustard
1 lemon very thinly sliced
3 c. shredded carrot
3 1-3 c. brown sugar
4 c. white vinegar

Wash and slice tomatoes and peel onions very thinly and sprinkle salt over them in layers and allow to stand covered overnight. In morning drain thoroughly, rinse with cold water and drain well again. Tie all spices loosely in cheesecloth bag (including dry mustard). (We used a J-Cloth.) Grate carrots coarsely. Slice lemon thinly removing seeds. In preserving kettle add spice bag and sugar to vinegar, bring to boiling then add tomatoes, onions, lemon slices and carrots. Cook very gently for ½ hour, stirring frequently. Remove spice bag. Pack pickles in hot sterile jars and seal.

Pre-School for Independence family

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

A special school based on 60-year-old teaching methods opened this fall in a two-room annex at 2368 Trent.

Island Montessori House is the city's third Montessori school, all run according to the educational ideas of famed Italian educator Maria Montessori.

Its 25 pre-schoolers (aged 3 to 5) use touch tablets, number rods and other educational equipment designed by Montessori years ago and now used in her schools around the world.

The new school is financed and run by parents to the children attending. Dr. David Leeming, a University of Victoria mathematics teacher, is president of the Island Montessori House Society.

Impetus for the new school was the fact that the Montessori pre-school run for the past four years by nuns at the Queenswood House of Studies was full and had a long waiting list, said Leeming.

The other Montessori school, run by Mrs. M. E. Thomas for many years at 3775 Duke Rd. in Metchosin, was too far away, he said. Mrs. Thomas is said to have trained under Montessori herself in London.

"A group of about 15 parents decided that if they were going to get their children into a Montessori school they were going to have to start their own," said Leeming.

Each parent gave a $100 refundable bond, and the society hired two teachers, Susan Irving and Judith Fowler. The annex of St. Patrick's School was rented.

Irving was an elementary school teacher in Saanich until she went to Toronto last year for a 10-month course in Montessori methods.

Montessori schools are very common in Toronto, she said, but Vancouver only has one and there are few in the rest of Canada.

Montessori, an Italian physician who lived from 1870 to 1952, believed a child learns from everything that is in his environment.

Her teaching method was to create a special classroom environment that contains only the things the teacher wants the children to learn and that will hold their attention.

Her ideas first gained recognition when her book The Montessori Method was published in 1912.

When students of the Island school first entered the classroom on Sept. 4, they found it completely bare.

Then carefully each day Irving introduced two or three of Montessori's special learning tools.

These include number rods that show the child that three is bigger than two, that six is twice as long as three. There are color cards of all varying shades which the child learns to put in order.

There is a set of bells which all look exactly alike, so the child must discriminate between them by their pitch alone.

There is only one set of the bells and other equipment usually, said Irving, so the children will learn to work together, take turns and cooperate.

The Montessori method is to isolate each sense and physical skill you want to develop in the child and devise special equipment or games to develop them, said Irving.

For example, before the teacher starts reading stories to her class she will teach them to listen, she said. She'll use a game such as having the children close their eyes and try to guess where the sound of a bell is coming from as the teacher walks around with it.

"The idea is to help the children to be independent," said Irving. "They learn skills. Their senses are refined."

Part of the method is to teach the children common skills such as trying shoelaces, washing their juice glasses, wiping off the table with a sponge, using an egg beater. This helps them be more independent, and also makes them improve important motor skills.

The Montessori method is a mixture of freedom and control, said Irving. The children are free to do what they like within the special environment the teacher has created.

Montessori worked out educational systems for children aged 6 to 12 and children 12 to 18 as well, said Irving, but they have been largely ignored in North America.

To Die With Peace

DEAR ABBY: I was alarmed when I read an item in your column encouraging your readers to send for "A Living Will," instructing one's clergyman, physician, attorney, and some appointed family members (or friends) to let him die with dignity when all agreed that death was inevitable. I failed to write at the time to express my horror. But now that I hear that you were responsible for distributing hundreds of thousands of these Living Wills, I can no longer remain silent.

Mercy killing is an unspeakable evil, and our country must not permit such a crime. We should respect the gift of life and preserve and protect it. The plea that it would be "merciful" to end a life should signal a second look to be sure the desire did not stem from a weariness of the persons caring for (and paying for) the one who is ill.

Suffering is difficult to watch, but it oftentimes leads a person to a deeper awareness of his human destiny. It builds strength and character.

I am sorry to see you pushing this Living Will so hard. You have millions of readers and could be a force for good instead of this type of thing.

People should trust in God, and let HIM decide when life should end. Who would YOU trust to decide when Abby shall die?

You have given the Living Will enough publicity. Please, be fair, and print this to show the other side. AGE 64.

DEAR 64: The Living Will is simply a document instructing my own clergyman, physician, lawyer, and selected members of my family (or even a few trusted friends) to allow me to die when they all agree that there is no hope for my recovery (physical or mental). I am not saying that you, or anyone else should express this wish. I am saying that this wish is mine, and I would hope that those who love me would respect my wishes. This doesn't suggest that I be "killed." It simply means that I do not want my life to be prolonged by artificial means when my physicians agree that all hope for life is gone, or should I lose my sense of reason.

This letter illustrates my point more graphically:

DEAR ABBY: You asked to hear from senior citizens: Would that some compassionate, benevolent God would take this body and accept the soul of man on the day he voluntarily retires or is arbitrarily retired from his work, and soon becomes—Useless Seventy.

DEAR ABBY: I am an adult and I want to change my whole name. I never liked my given name. It is confusing inasmuch as it's used for both males and females. My family name is very long and difficult to spell and pronounce, and even more difficult to remember.

What is the procedure? Does it cost anything? How long does it take? Whom do I have to see, and where is that person (or office) located? Thank you. — I. M. SERIOUS

DEAR SERIOUS: The procedure is a legal one, so see a lawyer. You should have no difficulty changing your whole name for the above mentioned reasons.

HANDSHAKE DANGER

WASHINGTON (UPI) — You are more likely to catch a cold from shaking hands than from kissing.

Government-financed research by the University of Virginia School of Medicine indicates that the most common route of infection is from the hands to the nose and eyes.

It said the virus can survive up to three hours on the hands once it is transmitted by an intermediary surface such as nylon, dacron, formica, stainless steel, plastic or someone else's skin.

Writing in the New England Journal of Medicine, the Virginia researchers recalled a previous study showing that one type of cold virus, the rhinovirus, was not transmitted by kissing. Handshaking, they said, is more dangerous.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Forecast for Wednesday, Oct. 3
By SYDNEY OMMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): This is not time for definite commitment. There are blocks, obstacles and jealous associates. Legal matters need clarification. Mate, partner is involved. See clearly — take stock. Aspirations are subject to change.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel plans might be affected by work assignment or medical appointment. Don't be in too much of a hurry. Study Aries message. Older individual may be intransigent. Be patient but know when to draw line.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You finish, reach more persons and deal directly with Aries, Libra persons. Money question is at "crunch" stage. You are due to get financial facts. If willing to perceive potential, news is good. Otherwise, you repeat lesson.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Lie low, finish task which resulted from past commitment. Practical issues dominate, including possible back tax situation. Leo, Aquarius persons are in picture. Be aware of legal-financial aspects.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Advice received from relatives could be less than sound. There are disagreements and tendency is to draw you into whirl of confusion. Be true to your own ideals. Refuse to be a bouncing ball for discontented persons.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Experiment. Be yourself and have fun. One who advocates otherwise may be ill, jealous or a combination of both. Emotional setback ultimately proves for your own good. Know it and refuse to be discouraged.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Practical approach is now most constructive — substitute direct action for daydreams. Aquarius, Leo, Scorpio persons could play important roles. Emphasis is on home, property, decisions from those who pull strings.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You do best now in behind-the-scenes capacity. Key is to find reasons instead of merely accepting what occurs. Be analytical. Your capabilities as a detective come to forefront. Gemini, Virgo persons are in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be called upon to make budget decision. Emotions fight to take over from logic. Family situation dominates. Strive for harmony — this comes about if willing to make creative, intelligent concession. Win rather than force your way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Conflict need not be cause for depression. Permit opposition to become challenge. Mate, partner may ask probing questions. See situation in practical light. State case in clear, concise manner. And stop apologizing!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What you do now has long-reaching results. Means weigh words, actions. Perceive potential. Detect subtle nuances. Take nothing for granted. Heed inner voice. Older person, who holds responsible position, wants you to succeed.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Some wishes can be fulfilled — but you have to give up some things. Means you get nothing for nothing. Get rid of past if this makes you brood, creates atmosphere of gloom. You have life of your own to live. Know it and let others become aware of it.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you eat too much at times and you give too much and you live to the hilt and you love people and people often take advantage of you. November will be one of your most important months of 1973. Many born under Gemini and Sagittarius are drawn to you. You have delightful sense of humor. You are great when you laugh!

Already some 20 per cent of Canadians are concentrated in our two major cities. By the end of this century an estimated 90 per cent of Canadians will live in urban areas.

The 12-page booklet "Open Space" points out that as urban growth gobbles up more and more land, less space will be available for our recreational pursuits. City parks with formal flower beds and a children's playground no longer suffice. Urbanites need large open spaces in which to relax from the daily hustle and bustle.

In addition to traffic jams, noise and pollution, the gradual disappearance of green spaces is but one sign of the negative impact on nature of our sprawling sities. But the dwindling open space is not a problem peculiar to Canada. It happens around the world and harms our environment. The only salvation lies in systematic conservation.

The booklet tells you what you can do to further this vital cause. It points out that some of the most effective contributions have been made by citizens' groups who are concerned with environmental quality and gives the addresses of several such groups.

China Relaxes to Mark 24th Birthday

By JOHN BURNS
Special to the Times

PEKING—China celebrated the 24th anniversary of the founding of the people's republic Monday in the relaxed and unspectacular fashion that has been the form since the gigantic National Day Parade was abandoned two years ago.

Speculation that Chairman Mao Tse-tung might appear at an evening fireworks display proved to be unfounded. The chairman remained instead in the seclusion he has maintained for 29 months and left the public duties to his deputy, Premier Chou En-lai.

The premier, accompanied by other top leadership figures, appeared at a park in the centre of Peking in the late afternoon. Following the same protocol as last year, he stayed for about an hour watching a sample of the popular entertainment that was laid on for the day.

The park was one of six in the city that were set aside for the festivities. At each, thousands crowded around open air stages to watch dancers, singers, conjurers and acrobats perform or to try their hand at games of skill and chance.

Due to the pressure of numbers, admission was by ticket only, but it was a popular occasion in every other sense, with truckloads of peasants from the countryside rubbing shoulders with government officials and diplomats and jostling with them for the best vantage points when highranking political leaders and foreign dignitaries passed by.

More than anything else it was a family day. The National Day festivities have always been an occasion for families to get together and the three-day holiday that many workers had this year — the regular two-day break plus Sunday — made it easier than usual for relatives to gather for the celebrations. The thousands of gaily dressed children who performed in the song and dance routines were augmented by thousands more who came with their parents and grandparents to enjoy the entertainment. Many of the smaller ones rode piggyback to get a better view, while their older brothers and sisters lined up patiently for their turns at the popgun ranges, slot-racing tracks and other amusements.

Politically it was an understated day. The revolutionary themes were still there in the singing and dancing, but there was a higher traditional content than in recent years and a greater emphasis on the essentially political arts, such as conjuring and sword-dancing.

The traditional editorial hailing the anniversary in the nation's principal newspapers was, of course, heavily political, but even it reinforced the mood of relaxation by stressing the themes of continuity and consolidation in the nation's political life.

The editorial appearing in the People's Daily, Liberation Army Daily and Red Flag magazine, extolled the "excellent situation at home and abroad." It also spoke of the mood of "revolutionary pride" in the nation in the wake of the recently concluded Tenth Party Congress.

The editorial placed great stress on the importance of the entire nation studying the documents of the congress, which reaffirmed the position of Chairman Mao and Premier Chou at the pinnacle of the party power structure. It also stressed the need to continue the campaign against Lin Piao, the former vice-chairman of the party, now dead, who is said to have mounted an assassination plot against Mao in 1971.

Diplomats considered it especially significant that the editorial emphasized once again the importance of party unity. After the debacle of the Lin affair party leaders appear anxious to put a stop to the cycle of plot and counterplot which has marked the history of the party from its beginning, and this concern was reflected in the editorial.

Quoting Mao, the editorial called for adherence to the "three dos and three don'ts" — "practice Marxism, not revisionism: Unite and don't split: Intrigue and conspire."

Perhaps reflecting the greater stability in the internal political situation, the editorial was much shorter than last year's. Its references to foreign policy were trimmed accordingly, but it did repeat earlier warnings of the need for the nation to stand guard against the danger of a sudden attack by the Soviet Union.

FAMILY FEUD ON BRIDGE?

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — The ill-fated Lakeshore Road Bridge across the Welland Canal, forced to close in May when struck by a German freighter, had to close again Monday when hit by the freighter's sister ship.

The bridge will be closed for about two weeks for repairs of damage caused by the 482-foot freighter, Burgenstein officials said. Last May it closed for two weeks after being hit by the sister ship, Buntenstein.

Ottawa Faces Nuclear Power Crossroads

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — In about a month, the federal government will have to decide whether $250 million in public funds should be used to build a much-needed heavy water plant and, if so, where the plant should be located.

At the time of the decision, Canada's young and increasingly-successful nuclear industry will arrive at one of its most important turning points in its controversy-filled 20-year history.

If Ottawa decides in favor the federal government will it now seems inevitable, then fourth heavy water plant, as of building the country's have once again done what it so fervently wants private industry to do.

Canada's nuclear industry will actually become more governmentcontrolled rather than more private industry-oriented as the 20-year-old game plan says it should be.

If Ottawa decides against building the critical heavy water plant, well then federal nuclear officials say bluntly that Canada's nuclear industry will die.

The unique Canadian nuclear power system, called CANDU, uses natural uranium as fuel and deuterium oxide, heavy water, as the moderator of the nuclear reaction and, in most models, also as the coolant. The more widly used American reactors use regular light water and highly-enriched uranium fuel.

If someone — either Ottawa, the provinces or private industry — doesn't build about four very large heavy water plants during the next 10 years, Canada won't have enough heavy water to run the expected increasing number of domestic and, it is hoped, foreign CANDU nuclear installations.

Federal nuclear officials fear that the lack of heavy water in the 1980s could force domestic customers to turn elsewhere, to the U.S. for nuclear reactors. And 20 years of nuclear development will be lost.

Despite repeated calls by Ottawa and more recently by Ontario, the country's leading user of nuclear energy, for private industry to take up the challenge and build heavy water plants, nobody has come forward, according to a spokesman for the Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd.

Industry, he suggested Monday, is probably scared of taking the risk, despite the fact that Ottawa would guarantee to buy as much as a plant could produce at a fixed price.

Why is industry scared? A large part of the reason is that heavy water plants have a history of problems.

The ill-fated Glace Bay plant in Nova Scotia is something Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield would ike to forget about.

Ottawa is now pouring $100-million into the plant in an attempt to rebuild it. The plant has yet to produce one drop of heavy water.

An operating plant at Port Hawkesbury, N.S. reportedly is still not operating at capacity, in part as a result of recent labor difficulties and Canadian General Electric is, at best, reportedly breaking even.

Additional heavy water plants are needed for expected nuclear growth in Quebec, New Brunswick, and later the Prairies and B.C.

In fact, should Ottawa approve construction of the first plant within a month as expected, the plant could be built by 1978 — just in time to supply heavy water to a reactor already sold to Argentina and another already planned for Quebec, called Gentilly II. The situation is that tight.

The federal decision on the location of the planned new heavy water plant — probably the first of three or four during the coming decade — has political implications above and beyond the nuclear industry.

The $250-million, 800-ton-a-year plant is a political plum of rather large proportions. And for months, a number of communities have been publicly and privately vying for it.

Federal officials won't say what sites are being considered or what locations are favored. But sources do reveal the following:

—Ontario and Nova Scotia, already with heavy water plants, aren't in the running. Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, relatively isolated from the mainland as they are, are also not being considered.

—Quebec seems to be the favorite for a number of reasons. It plans to have or already has the necessary large accounts of power needed; and it is expected to be the next growth area for nuclear energy, once the James Bay region is developed. Gaspe, Lac St. Jean and Montmagny have indicated interest.

—The heavy water plant could be built on top or near coal fields such as in B.C. The coal would be used as a cheap and reliable source of electricity and steam for the plant. British Columbia is believed to be a leading contender in this area.

What's needed is a cheap and reliable supply of electricity and steam; a good supply of pure water, preferably high in deuterium for making deuterium oxide, heavy water; and a low population density, in part as a result of the dangers associated with hydrogen sulphide emissions from the plant.

Photographer Again Closing In: Jackie

NEW YORK — It was learned Monday that Jacqueline Onassis has asked a federal court to reconsider its drastically modified rules on the distance at which she can be followed by photographer Ronald Galella.

Attorneys for the former first lady asked the appeals court to rehear the long-standing controversy in order to establish a "clear workable decree that will protect Mrs. Onassis."

Mrs. Onassis's attorney's said the court's action last month in reducing the limits from 150 to 25 feet has freed Galella "to leap around her and hurl verbal taunts as he follows her up and down the streets of New York."

NEW YORK — Sen. Howard Baker (Rep. Tenn.) said Monday he will not consider the possibility of winning the 1976 presidential nomination while the Senate Watergate Committee investigation goes on.

"No serious thoughts (of the nomination) will be permitted in my mind while I am undertaking the most painful duty of my political career," said Baker, vice-chairman of the Senate panel.

WASHINGTON — Sen. Charles Percy, (Rep.—Ill.), has asked the government to limit the markings on automobile speedometers to 90 miles an hour.

Percy said speedometers marked up to 120, 140 and even 160 miles an hour are "an invitation to recklessness, to hit-and-run accidents, to vehicular homicide — in short an invitation to death."

GENEVA — The Dalai Lama arrived here Monday to a reception as cold as the north wind that swept the airport.

The only ones to meet him were members of the 800-member Tibetan refugee colony. The 38-year-old spiritual leader of 1.3 million Tibetan Buddhists has lived in exile in India since China occupied Tibet in 1959. "This is a completely private visit and the Dalai Lama will not be received either by federal authorities or Geneva state officials," a government spokesman said.

MOSCOW — U.S. Treasury Secretary George Shultz met Monday night for more than two hours with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev to discuss the prospects for Soviet-American trade.

Tass, the Soviet News Agency, said the meeting took place "in a business-like atmosphere." Tass said Shultz and Brezhnev discussed "a broad range of questions concerning relations between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. . . . including the development of trade and economic ties."

DETROIT — The price of honor and value of friendship for Leroy Coleman Sr., a Detroit factory worker, came to $6,108.10.

Coleman and his son, Leroy Jr., who also works at Kelsey Hayes Co., were robbed Friday of more than $6,000 in their wages and of 40 fellow workers who asked them to cash their cheques at a local bank.

Coleman then went to his own bank, withdrew all his $2,000 saving and began phoning relatives and friends to scrape together the rest. By Saturday he had raised the entire amount which he distributed to the men Monday.

Night Clerk Foils Tryst for Romy

BERLIN (UPI) — A 5.30 a.m. tussle in a West Berlin hotel could bring legal complications for actress Romy Schneider, West Berlin police said today.

Police reported the Egyptian night clerk at the hotel Am Stein Platz said the 34-year-old German actress hit him over the head with her hotel key early Monday in a pushing and shoving match when he refused to let German actor Bruno Ganz go up to her room with her.

The Egyptian was treated for superficial head cuts at the Albrecht Achilles Hospital.

"I never saw a lady act that way before," he said. "She hit me on the back of the head and the temples with her key and the man punched me. I had to protect myself."

Police said the night clerk, Omar Mourad, had not yet filed charges of assault, but had three days to do so if he wished.

The actress returned Monday to Paris where she lives.

"As I entered the hotel with Bruno at about 5.30 a.m. the night clerk planted himself in our path and grabbed Bruno's arm real hard and said 'you're not coming in here.'

SCHNEIDER
. . . key swinger

"Bruno took his hand away and then the night clerk shoved him against the elevator door. Then the fight took place. The Arab knocked my key out of my hand and then another Arab ran up. I really was afraid."

Achim Zellermayer, the hotel manager, said: "The night clerk has only been with us eight days. Perhaps he followed the rules too closely."

Munro Refuses Bid

OTTAWA (CP) — Labor Minister John Munro, who had been considering running for the Liberal party leadership in Ontario, announced Monday he has decided against jumping into the provincial contest.

He is the second federal cabinet minister in a week to announce he has decided against seeking the Ontario Liberal leadership.

Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan opted out of the race a week ago. Munro gave similar reasons to those given by his colleague for staying in the federal cabinet. Munro said the challenges in his portfolio were great and there were so many things to be done that he had decided to stay on in his post as labor minister.

He was asked if Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau had asked him to stay on in the cabinet. He said he had discussed the possibility of running for the leadership with the prime minister but Trudeau had said it was a decision Munro would have to make on his own and "if he felt it was the right thing to do he should do it."

Munro said there had been numerous calls in recent weeks urging him to enter the race at the Liberal Ontario convention on October 28.

PABLO'S ART DONATED TO LOUVRE

PARIS (UPI) — Jacqueline, widow of the late Pablo Picasso, and Paolo, his only legitimate son, have signed an agreement to donate the late artist's art collection to the Louvre.

Included are 40 canvasses by Corot, Cezanne, Modigliani, Braque, Renoir, Matisse and others, as well as 11 one-copy etchings by Degas, a spokesman for the museum said. He said the collection will be on exhibit by next spring.

Transplanted Heart Fails

PARIS (AP) — Andre Lefrancois, given a new heart in a transplant operation Friday, died today. Death was attributed to malfunctioning of the heart, rather than rejection of the transplanted organ.

The death of Lefrancois, 40, a gardener, was the third failure for Dr. Daniel Guilmet out of five transplants since January.

'RIP-OFF' REFUSED

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Pacific Telephone Co. said Monday it will no longer play along with "the eight cent rip-off."

About 138,000 customers a month mail in their phone bill payment without putting a stamp on the envelope, said George Donnelly, assistant vice-president. That is about 2.3 per cent of the utility's customers, and can cost the telephone firm $140,000 a year, he said.

Until now, our dealers' showrooms haven't had many '74s to show. But don't blame the dealers. We ran into transportation delays just when we began shipping our 1974 cars and trucks to General Motors dealers. As a result, they weren't able to stock as many body styles, models and colors as we all would have liked when our '74 announcement advertising broke.

But that is all over now. New 1974 cars and trucks are in good supply at all GM dealers and more are arriving every day. You're invited to see them.

As of right now, see your General Motors dealer and look over and drive the great new 1974s!

'LOUD GREEN' BALL SPOTTED IN SKY

CLEVELAND (UPI) — There were several reports Monday morning of a "glowing green ball" in the sky, and one Cleveland woman said she saw it land in a field in suburban Olmsted township, but a search of the area by police was futile.

"When I first saw it," said Mrs. Barbara Marquardt, "it only looked about a foot in diameter, but it was up high. It was really loud green. Real bright. I never saw anything like this before."

Mrs. Marquardt, 20, spotted the object in the sky at 3:30 a.m. and said it travelled over her car and descended on a curve to the surface of the field.

"We couldn't locate anything back there," said police chief Richard Masielle, who led the search for the object. "But it's a large field. We combed it as much as we could. The field is filled with thick underbrush and pricker bushes.

"Several people did hear some strange eerie noises," Masielle said. "They never heard anything like it before. It did upset the animals. One horse even ran off."

"Zoning By-Law, 1956, Amendment By-Law (No. 334), 1973"

CITY OF VICTORIA
NOTICE OF HEARING

Notice is hereby given that all persons deeming their interest in property affected by the above-mentioned draft Zoning By-Law Amendment (No. 334) will be afforded an opportunity to be heard on the matters contained therein before the City Council at a Public Hearing to be held in the Council Chamber, City Hall, on WEDNESDAY, the 10th day of OCTOBER, 1973, at 8:00 P.M.

Copy of the by-law may be inspected at the office of the City Clerk in the City Hall between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m., Monday to Friday inclusive (except Monday, October 8th, 1973 — Thanksgiving Day Holiday).

DRAFT BY-LAW (NO. 334) provides for ONLY:

The rezoning from "R-3 Multiple Dwelling" to "R-2 Two Family" of all those lots, lands, parcels or tracts of lands lying and situate within the following described boundaries:

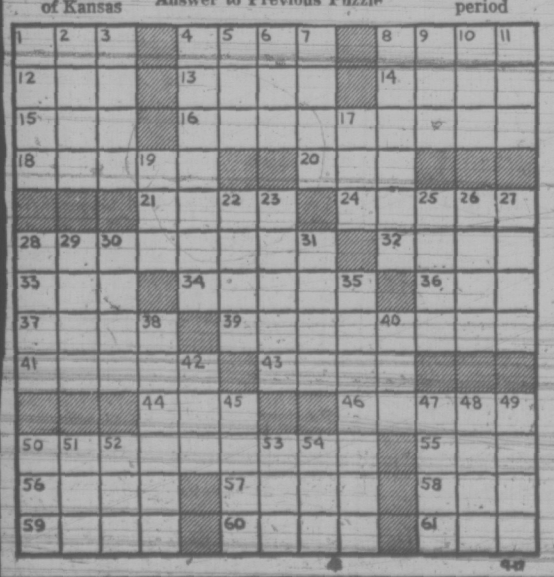
Answer to Previous Puzzle



VIRUSES NOT KISSING KIN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — You are more likely to catch a cold from shaking hands than from kissing.

Government-financed research by the University of Virginia school of medicine indicates that the most common route of infection is from the hands to the nose and eyes.

It said the virus can survive up to three hours on the hands once it is transmitted by an intermediary surface such as nylon, dacron, formica, stainless steel, plastic or someone else's skin.

Writing in the New England Journal of Medicine, the Virginia researchers recalled a previous study showing that one type of cold virus, the rhinovirus, was not transmitted by kissing. Handshaking, they said, was more dangerous.

The research found that only two of 25 people with colds caused by the rhinovirus expelled the virus in a cough or sneeze. But four of 10 naturally infected persons shed rhinovirus onto their hands, possibly by rubbing or blowing their noses.

Among 11 volunteers, four developed a typical common cold after touching the mucous membranes of their noses or eyes with fingers previously contaminated with rhinovirus, the scientists said.

Another study financed by the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, one of the National Institutes of Health, showed that chilling, exposure or overheating had very little effect on the development or seriousness of a cold.

Saanich Shuns 'Ticky-Tacky'

Nothing that's "ticky-tacky" or "unimaginative" will be allowed in Saanich, ruled council Monday night.

An application by developer W. R. Bentley to have zoning changed from single-family residential on lots opposite the B.C. Telephone Company office on McKenzie to build a 71-unit apartment was rejected.

In spite of the Advisory Planning Commission's recommendation the application be approved, municipal planner Tom Loney recommended it be turned down because of poor design.

Loney said he had asked Bentley for changes in the design but what changes had been made were "pretty nominal."

The design presented would produce "ticky-tacky apartments," said Ald. Edith Gunning. The developer would come up with a plan "more sympathetic with the area."

Mayor Hugh Curtis described the plan as "most unimaginative."

An application by J. Whitcroft Construction Ltd. to build a 36-unit apartment on Glenora also was turned down.

Tht application was refused because of insufficient sewer capacity in the area.

"Given the biggest sewer in the world," Ald. Alan Newberry said, "I'd still oppose this application," observing that home-owners in the area should not have to look out on an apartment building.

REID CENTRE TO COURT

A B.C. Supreme Court hearing in Vancouver Oct. 12 will test the validity of a land-use contract between the city of Victoria and Vancouver developer J. A. Reid.

Although the original contract for Reid's Wharf Street project was invalidated by the developer's failure to carry out lot consolidation within 90 days of signing, city council agreed July 26 to grant him a time extension.

Subsequently, however, Reid informed council that he could not meet within 90 days one of the prime conditions under which the extension was granted: namely, the provision of proof of his firm's financial capability to complete the entire project.

Council then agreed to allow Reid additional time to come up with financial guarantees, provided that he sought a Supreme Court declaratory judgment as to the validity of the contract itself and of the time extension.

Red Leader On Trial In Chile

SANTIAGO (UPI) — The military junta said Monday the head of Chile's Communist party was being tried by a court martial for treason and faced a possible sentence of death by firing squad.

The junta also said nine alleged snipers were executed by firing squads Sunday, raising to 17 the number of summary executions in Chile since the armed forces ousted the late president Salvador Allende Sept. 11.

A junta spokesman said Communist chief Luis Corvalan, 57, captured by an army patrol last Friday, was being tried by an armed forces tribunal at Chile's national military academy in Santiago.

The junta said Corvalan, secretary general of the communist party for 16 years and a former senator, was considered legally responsible for the outlawed party's actions.

Court Ends Harassing Phone Calls

PORT HARDY (CP) — An 18-year-old youth was sentenced to nine months probation Monday in provincial court for making harassing telephone calls to local residents.

Michael Joseph Tuckey had pleaded guilty to making the calls to women in the Port Hardy area.

Judge G. N. Woodward said Tuckey would be subject to certain conditions under the probation and would have to report regularly to a probation officer.

The youth was charged after being traced to his home through an RCMP-telephone company bugging operation.

Spacemen Can Expect Illness

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Skylab 1 astronaut Joseph Kerwin, appearing at a convention of the Society of Experimental Test Pilots, said there's not much astronauts can do to prepare themselves for motion sickness on space flights.

"It's like telling a bunch of navy recruits they're going to get seasick," he said.

A fellow astronaut, Tom Stafford, who will command the planned U.S.-Soviet space mission, said he was cheered by the success of the Russian Soyuz 12 flight because it tested many systems to be used on the 1975 journey.

U.S. Orders Fuel Curbs

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon today ordered a mandatory allocation program for home heating oil and propane in an effort to soften the impact of threatened winter shortages.

White House energy adviser, John Love, said the mandatory system of allocating propane under a priority program would become effective immediately.

Detailed regulations affecting heating oil will be placed into effect in the near future, Love said. Other administration officials said they would take effect in a week or two.

It was clear the U.S. "will experience some fuel shortages this winter and perhaps over the next few years," Love said.

In other energy news, four major U.S. oil companies have raised their wholesale gasoline prices since Friday and other firms are expected to follow suit this week.

Under the Cost of Living Council's Phase 4 guidelines released last Friday, there are no provisions to let dealers include the increases in their retail prices.

Wayne Bowlby, president of the Oregon Gasoline Dealers Association, said the increases wipe out gains made by dealers Friday.

In some cases, he said, dealers are making less profit per gallon than they were before Friday's new guidelines.

Atlantic Richfield raised its wholesale price 1½ cents a gallon Monday.

Shell Oil announced a two-tenths of a cent boost dated 12:01 a.m. Sept. 29, one minute too late for the dealers to pass it on to the consumer.

"That wasn't even subtle," a Shell station owner said. "They just waited for the CLC ruling to go into effect, then gobbled up the profit margin."

Meanwhile, talks of a nation-wide protest against the freeze on gasoline prices spread among filling-station operators in the U.S. today, with half the stations in Houston, Tex., closed Monday and more than a thousand on New York's Long Island expected to do the same in the next few days.

In Los Angeles, organizers of a mass shutdown of southern California gas stations predicted that from 65 to 90 per cent of the area's dealers will join the protest by taking an indefinite "vacation" beginning Friday.

"The basic gripe is that these men can't stay in business under the controls that presently exist under Phase IV," said Stanley Arnold, attorney for the Gasoline Retailers Association of Southern Californij.

A BOY'S BEST FRIEND . . . isn't loved by city hall. Beady-eyed Willie, a three-inch tarantula, is getting the hard eye from city police in Windsor, Ont., because a city bylaw outlaws the possession of dangerous animals or reptiles within the city. However, Willie's owner, David Jamieson, 11, is hoping the city's lawyers can't stretch interpretation of the law to cover tarantulas — obviously an insect.

Unions, Bosses Both Blast Code

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

An entirely new structure for the labor-management process in British Columbia, including establishment of an all-powerful new Labor Relations Board, is contained in legislation introduced Monday by Labor Minister Bill King.

King said this morning his target date for proclamation of Bill 11 is Jan. 1, 1974 at the latest, at which time all sections will be proclaimed.

The legislation repeals the former Trade Unions Act, the Mediation Services Act and the Labor Relations Act and sets up the new Labor Relations Board as a "labor court," with exclusive jurisdiction over almost all aspects of labor-management relations.

The new board, a 10-man body composed of a chairman, three vice-chairmen and three representatives each from labor and management, is to have powers never before bestowed on any single agency in the B.C. industrial relations process.

There is no provision for appeal of the board's decisions and actions except to a new provincial labor ombudsman, who has power to recommend.

The basic framework in which labor-management negotiations take place in B.C. remains substantially unchanged. There are, however, a number of significant changes to some principle concepts under which trade unions and employers operate.

These include provision of an exemption clause in union contracts which will allow individuals to opt out of unions on religious grounds but still pay dues to the union.

There is also some restricting of picketing practices but a struck union's competitors may now be picketed /and more "informational" picketing will be allowed.

Under the new legislation, which is called the Labor Code of British Columbia Act (Bill 11), a certification vote is to be held among a group of employees if requested by 35 per cent of the employees. Fifty per cent plus one of the employees must vote for certification before a bargaining unit is established. Previously, a majority was needed just to stage a vote.

Bill 11 empowers the minister of labor to impose a binding collective agreement on any union or employer which refuses to bargain in good faith. The agreement can be put into effect for as long as a year.

Bargaining between established bargaining units and employers must start no later than 60 days prior to the expiry of the agreement in force between the two parties, and can commence as early as four months prior to expiry if either side wishes.

Injunctions obtained from courts of law to stop illegal strike action and picketing will in future be obtainable only from the Labor Relations Board itself.

All contracts will be required to contain provisions guaranteeing employee secu-

LAW PROFESSOR TO HEAD BOARD

Paul Weiler, a 34-year-old professor at Osgoode Hall Law School in Toronto, has been appointed to a five-year term as chairman of the new Labor Relations Board.

The appointment was approved by the cabinet this morning and announced by Labor Minister Bill King, who described Weiler as having "a wealth of experience in labor affairs."

The law professor, who will receive $39,000 a year as chairman of the board, has chaired more than 200 arbitrations both for the province of Ontario and a number of private companies.

Ed Peck, president of the Towboat Industrial Relations Association, will be chief administrative officer of the board as vice-chairman. His salary will be $38,000.

King said Peck, a 49-year-old native Victorian, "has a background of 20 years' experience in industrial and labor relations in the province, in both public and private industry, and federal and provincial jurisictions."

Formerly manager of labor relations for B.C. Hydro, Peck has acted as a mediator in private disputes and as a government-appointed conciliator.

Two other vice-chairmen, who will receive $33,000 a year for their five-year terms, are Jack Moore, former regional president of the Inter-

HIGHLIGHTS

The new Labor Code of British Columbia Act (Bill 11), introduced in the legislature Monday features:

—New Labor Relations Board established, with extremely wide discretionary powers covering all major areas of labor-management relations.

—Negotiations for new agreement must start at least 60 days prior to expiry of old contract.

—Only 35 per cent approval of employee group (down from 50 plus one) needed to stage certification vote.

—All contracts must have "technological change" provisions.

—Exemptions from unions on religious grounds will be allowed.

—Labor board empowered to impose first collective agreement on employer or union refusing to bargain in good faith.

—Provincial labor ombudsman established to handle complaints from employers and unions as well as individuals.

—Powers of arbitration boards increased and boards made less accountable to courts.

—Informational picketing allowed at any time, but other picketing somewhat restricted.

—Picketing of competitors of struck employer allowed if competitor gains from work stoppage.

—Employers are forbidden to "use, or authorize or permit the use of" professional strikebreakers.

—Wipes out a controversial section of the current Labor Relations Act making it illegal for unions to contribute money for political parties or candidates.

—Makes null and void any contract which discriminates against any person contrary to the Human Rights Act. This will wipe out any union contract with discriminatory pay rates as between men and women.

Trade union leaders were more dissatisfied than anyone today with the proposed B.C. labor code and warned unless it is changed it "will cause increased labor unrest."

A preliminary analysis prepared by the B.C. Federation of Labor and parent Canadian Labor Congress described a number of provisions as "detrimental to the working people" in the province.

The unionists said at a press conference in Vancouver the New Democratic Party government they helped elect "has departed drastically" from NDP policies in its 1972 election platform.

According to Ray Haynes, federation secretary-treasurer, the unionists will now start working with "people in the NDP who are close enough to labor" to get the code overhauled.

On the employers' side, leaders in the construction industry were also highly critical but employers generally were maintaining a cool reaction.

Charles Connaghan, president of Construction Labor Relations Association, said the code will create "nothing but chaos" in his industry and described it as "gigantic step backwards."

But William Hamilton, president of the Employers' Council of B.C., of which CLRA is a member, told another press conference employers generally will take a positive approach to the legislation.

Hamilton said employers have reservations about some sections and are completely opposed to others, but will make representations for changes with the view that, if the legislation can be used to minimize strikes and lockouts, "we will be happy."

The federation objected to the government appointing none of the people it had recommended for executive positions in the labor setup.

"The majority of these positions will be filled by people with no background in the trade union movement, nor any record of assisting the aspirations of working people," said their preliminary analysis.

"So the government is proposing to place the fate of working people in the hands of a (labor relations) board dominated by professional people and employer representatives."

Unless there are substantial amendments, the trade union leaders recommended the proposed code be referred to the legislature's standing committee on labor "to enable the labor movement to make clear the potentially-disastrous implications of many sections."

Haynes was chief spokesman at the labor press conference, flanked by federation vice-president Len Guy of the Typographical Union, Mike Parr of the Operating Engineers and William Stewart of the Marine-Boilermakers.

The union leaders criticized provisions to assist the organizing of the unorganized on grounds they still will omit fishermen, agricultural workers and licensed professionals from union certification, make organizational

Austria Refuses Israel's Pleas

VIENNA (UPI) — Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir tried unsuccessfully for two hours today to convince Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky to reverse or amend his decision to close down a transit camp for Soviet Jews bound for Israel.

Copper Boost

TORONTO (CP) — Three companies have announced immediate increases of seven cents a pound in the price of copper in North America, raising it to 71 cents a pound. The three are International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd., Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Ltd. and Noranda Sales Corp.

Extortion Bid

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — Two U.S. Airlines have received letters demanding they donate $500,000 each to specified charities or face harassment of passengers and attacks on their offices here. Police are investigating the letter sent to Braniff and Pan American.

Nixon 'Backed' Ellsberg Raid

Times News Services

LOS ANGELES — President Nixon "specificially approved" a venture to the west coast by Howard Hunt and Gordon Liddy to develop information on Daniel Ellsberg and the Pantagon Papers leak according to former White House domestic chief John Ehrlichman.

He did not, however, say that the president authorized the burgling of the office of Ellsberg's analyst.

Ehrlichman testified last June before the Los Angeles County grand jury, which last month returned an indictment charging him with perjury and conspiracy in connection with the break-in at the psychiatrist's Beverly Hills office. That testimony, along with that of more than two dozen other witnesses, was made public Monday.

While the 727-page transcript revealed nothing dramatically new, it did shed some light on the role of the so-called "plumbers unit," the secret White House investigative team created by Nixon in the summer of 1971, and its relationship with the president.

Ehrlichman was asked: "Did you approve that recommendation to investigate Ellsberg?"

"I believe the recommendation was discussed specifically with the president, before it was approved."

"By you?"

"No, I — as I say, I believe he — he specifically approved it. And it's my recollection that he either discussed it with — well, I know he discussed it with Mr. Hoover."

"What was your understanding," the questioning continued, "of the investigative methods to be used by Mr. Hunt and Liddy during the course of their investigations?"

"Only that they were to conduct themselves in such a fashion that it did not apper that the White House was directly involved in the act of investigation."

Defeated General Jailed

SAIGON (Reuter) — The Saigon military court for the first time has passed sentence on a general for a military defeat.

The court sentenced Brig-Gen. Yu Van Giai today to five years hard labor for his part in the fall of Quang Tri in May last year. He was also stripped of his rank and 30 medals.

The court, comprised of a civilian president and four generals, found him guilty of abandoning his post in the face of the enemy and of disobeying the orders of his superiors.

Gen. Giai, 39, commanded the South Vietnamese force which captured Tchepone in Laos in the first ground strike at the Ho Chi Minh trail network in 1971.

He was then generally considered the most aggressive of South Vietnam's young battlefield commanders and was promoted to command the newly formed Third Division which was decimated at Quang Tri in last year's offensive.

NEW BEEF SPIRAL FEARED

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A continent-wide beef shortage this winter will send prices soaring, possibly even beyond the peak levels of August, warns Bruce Whyte, general manager of the British Columbia Livestock Producers Co-operative Association.

Market uncertainties and the high costs of raising beef have resulted in reduced production and the industry is not expanding to meet growing demands, Whyte said Monday.

"At the present level of return, many beef producers and finishing operations consider expansion a bad investment," he said.

U.K. Retreats In Cod War

LONDON (AP) — Britain ordered its naval shield of three frigates and three tugs out of Iceland's disputed 50-mile fishing zone today.

The move was disclosed after Prime Minister Heath told the Icelandic government in a note that the British warships and tugs would be out of the disputed area by Wednesday.

"The withdrawal will be made on the assumption that the Icelandic authorities will not take any measures against British trawlers fishing, or which have fished, in the disputed area," Heath told Icelandic Prime Minister Olafur Joahannesson.

"The navy and the tugs will return if this assumption proves to be wrong."

Heath at the same time invited Johannesson to London for talks on achieving a live-and-let-live arrangement in the zone.

Iceland extended its limits to 50 from 12 miles 13 months ago and met British and other international protests.

Heath sent his letter about 12 hours before the expiry of Iceland's ultimatum to this country demanding a pull-out of the naval shield by midnight Tuesday night.

Heath told Johannessen he trusted that the Reykjavik government, in the light of the British decision, will maintain its diplomatic ties.

LIFE TERM FOR HEROIN

TORONTO (CP) — Ng Yuen Hing, a 37-year-old cook from New York City, was sentenced Monday to life imprisonment for trafficking in 25 pounds of heroin worth $4 million on the illegal market.

Federal prosecutor David Scott, who had called for a life sentenee, said he did so because Ng was not an addict but dealt in drugs solely for the money.

The Rum-Runners Were Mounties

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (UPI) — A number of Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers have been found guilty of smuggling liquor to Newfoundland from the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Chief Superintendent K. B. M. Fraser said the men were found guilty by a "tribunal of RCMP officers" of offences under the customs act.

Ottawa Backs B.C. Gas Policy

Federal Energy Minister Donald Macdonald says he agrees in principle with the British Columbia government that prices for natural gas should be greatly increased.

He said a recommendation by the British Columbia Energy Commission that prices be raised from 32 cents per thousand cubic feet to 58 cents is similar to federal policy.

"Prices for export should be increased and indeed that was the substance of the government's change in the National Energy Board regulations back in 1970, so I have no argument on it," he said in an interview in Victoria.

The federal energy minister said natural gas should only be exported at prices similar to other forms of energy.

The federal minister said it was clearly within provincial jurisdiction to establish a Crown agency to control gas production at the wellhead and to direct Westcoast Transmission Company to become a common carrier.

In Vancouver, Robert Kadiec, president of Inland Natural Gas, said the predicted natural gas shortage could have disastrous consequences for industries in the B.C. interior this winter.

He said the shortage could result in lay-offs at some plants.

"The reaction voiced by some of our customers has so far ranged from 'serious' to 'disastrous'," Kadiec said.

"Our customers are all extremely vulnerable to the shortage because, as Inland operations, they have no access to alternate fuels," Kadiec said.

Cowichan Fishing Allowed

Environment Minister Jack Davis said from Vancouver today he has reached a tentative understanding with the Cowichan Band council allowing them up to 5,000 salmon from the Cowichan River runs.

Davis met the council and other Indian representatives in Duncan Monday night and he said today he sees the main accomplishment as agreement on the principle of escapement — assuring enough salmon reach spawning beds to assure future runs.

If taking of salmon from the river by Indians is judged to be threatening escapement of any species, the band will have the alternative of making up the needed quota from the commercial fishery, such as through hiring a seiner.

Davis said the meeting did not deal in detail with means of harvesting fish from the river.

BURNHAM FIGHTS ON

A writ of summons against members of the federal government — sent to Victoria MP Allan McKinnon for registration with the Supreme Court in Ottawa — has been returned.

"He (McKinnon) said I can't start at the top, I have to come up through the local courts to the federal court," said Burnham, now 83.

"I'm registering the writ today at county court in the criminal division," Burnham said, adding County Court Judge Drake had advised him in his last court appearance in 1971 that the proceedings belonged in criminal court.

"I kept on taking it to civil court — been there three times now and finally the judge admitted it should be in criminal court," said Burnham.

Drake then said Burnham has "persistently and without any reasonable ground instituted vexatious legal proceedings with respect to or concerning the validity of the Canadian flag."

Pollen's 'Palace' Survives Blast

Victoria Alderman Mike Young made a last-ditch effort today to persuade fellow aldermen against approval of a new downtown parking structure, between Courtney and Broughton, warning the project would be cause for regret, "for years to come."

Young told council's public works committee he was convinced seven out of nine council members are "crazy" in supporting the proposal for a $900,000 parking facility at that location, when there was no proven need for it and other parking structures had blighted the downtown scene.

Young said the parkade on lower Yates Street "must be one of the most god-awful sights man ever created."

"I must say we are really doing something for our landscape with these parkades. It really chokes me up," Young added.

Council gave formal approval to the capital works project last week, and the committee today showed little inclination to support Young by re-opening discussion.

Mayor Peter Pollen did say, however, that emerging from current talks with the provincial government it might prove possible to develop a more comprehensive scheme than is now envisaged, with the parking structure included in a general government building complex.

Last word on the subject from Young: "When it's constructed we're going to call it Peter Pollen's Parking Palace."

On another aspect of parking problems, the committee grappled ineffectively with the question: How do you persuade apartment dwellers in James Bay to use the parking lots provided and not park their vehicles on the streets?

Committee chairman Ald. Clyde Savage said single family dwellers on Boyd Street are "hopping mad" because the apartment residents' cars jam the streets and even obstruct the driveways to private homes.

Planning director Geoff Greenhalgh said the real problem is not inadequate parking standards for new apartments, but the fact that people who live in them just will not use the spaces provided. "It's more convenient to park on the street, they do so and the parking lots are half-empty," Greenhalgh said.

Traffic engineer Dave Campbelll said his department had suggested enforcement measures but these had been rejected as impractical by city police.

After Pollen commented it was not up to the police to rule on the question, the committee tabled the matter until Campbell suggests his own solutions.

Quadra Extension Approved

A $202,000 extension to Quadra Street designed to relieve downtown traffic congestion with a southern bypass route received the green light at City Hall today, after the project had been stalled three years.

The scheme involves expending and re-aligning Quadra along Rupert as far as Heywood, to provide a ring road system for hundreds of provincial government civil servants who now use either Government of Douglas.

Informally approved by city counsil's committee of the whole last week, the Quadra project received formal endorsement today from the public works committee.

It is the first step in a long-term program which will likely see Quadra and Vancouver developed as a one-way pair.

At today's meeting Mayor Peter Pollen stressed council should make clear to the public is is progressing with its road program in an orderly, planned nammer, "and not just carvinmg up the city for the fun of it."

Pollen said road improvements are an essential first step toward the city's aspirations for downtown malls, adding, "there is method is our madness."

'Safe' Report Defuses Beach Protest

By BRUCE OBEE
Times Staff

Behind the Tweed Curtain there are beaches covered with "pale green algae, grey scum, rotting seaweed and muck" — and its perfectly safe for swimming.

At Oak Bay council's parks and recreation committee meeting Monday night Beach Drive residents who attempted to blame Oak Bay Marina for polluting nearby waters were rather shocked to learn the beaches are not polluted.

About 30 apartment-dwellers launched an attack on the marina saying two breakwaters — "put up purely for the benefit of the marina" — have restricted the flow of water which kept the beaches clean.

The group also complained of overcrowded mooring conditions, heavy traffic to and from the marina, noise from Sealand's animals, inadequate toilet facilities, unsightly heaps of rock, and noise from sailboat rigging banging against hollow masts.

In a letter to the committee, Mrs. Gladys M. Gowland, 902—1420 Beach Drive,, said "the marina is run purely for monetary gain while the hundreds of property owners from Margate Avenue to near Glenlyon School are increasingly filled with disgust, despair and anger.

"This blatantly commercial incubus with its Coney Island atmosphere," the letter continued, "has no place in a residential area and it is depreciating the value of our properties.

"To live on the waterfront is becoming a nightmare. Above the gas station now flies a Canadian flag. It should be at half-mast."

'Get-Well Card' for Octopus

Mrs. Gowland told the meeting she was becoming concerned about the health of Sealand's animals and was considering sending the octopus a get-well card.

Throughout the meeting she blamed the breakwaters for the "despoilation of the beautiful bay" in front of her home.

"We want the rollers back and we want the breakwaters out," she said repeatedly.

Mrs. Gowland's allegations were supported by letters written to council by 13 other nearby residents.

Hamish Simpson, headmaster of Glenlyon School, said the group had "levelled their guns at Oak Bay Marina" and pointed out that marina-owner Bob Wright was probably equally concerned about pollution because of the animals at Sealand.

Simpson suggested the outfall beside the school could be one of the causes for the foul smell along the shoreline.

In a 45-minute address to the meeting Bob Wright said he was "extremely concerned" about pollution in the area and had asked University of Victoria oceanographer Dr. Jack Littlepage to conduct various tests.

The atmosphere of the meeting changed drastically when Littlepage said there was "no evidence that either the marina or the breakwaters had any effect" on the nearby beaches.

Littlepage, who is expected to submit a report to the committee next week, said his study of the shoreline showed there was no "bacterial contamination" and algae growing along the shore is not unusual for this time of year.

The odor is caused by the decomposition of algae which grows in the summer, he said, and will be washed away with the first winter storm.

A film on the surface of the water is fresh-water fungi caused by storm drains along the shoreline, said Littlepage, and October winds will likely cause enough wave action to mix it with the salt water.

Natural cycles will cause algae to grow whether or not there's a breakwater, he said.

Beaches Are Living, Changing

"Beaches are living, changing things," he said.

Ald. John Goult said the traffic problem can't be solved.

"We are experiencing a problem with what, in some circles, is called progress.

"The marine drive is one of Victoria's main "selling points," said Goult. "We cannot say to people from California or Saskatchewan 'you have now hit the Tweed Curtain, turn around and go back'."

Wright emphatically opposed allegations the marina was an "eyesore" telling the meeting that he has received numerous letters, from European and American municipalities wanting similar marinas.

He offered his "very sincere and humble apology" for the animal noise, adding he may have solved the problem and a new public address system also had been recently installed to eliminate noise caused by regular shows at Sealand.

After nearly three and a half hours of discussion the committee passed a motion to begin a monitoring program in the waters, to investigate extending the Glenlyon outfall, and to check if any nutrients are being pumped into the water.

And the Fish Went Too

Two men leapt overboard with a fish they had just caught and swam to shore when their boat caught fire in Satellite Channel Monday night.

Sidney RCMP say Richard Young of 11147 West Saanich Road and Dennis O'Sullivan of 9364 Maryland Drive swam about 50 yards after fire destroyed the boat.

Police say Young shut off the motor when they hooked the fish and, when he tried to restart it, there was an explosion.

The B.C. Ferry, Queen of Saanich, passing nearby saw the flames and was about to send a boat when the fire appeared to go out.

Rescue officials in Victoria dispatched the coast guard cutter Ready but, by the time it had arrived, the vessel had sunk.

A police spokesman said the boat was worth $6,000.

In another boating mishap Monday three people were rescued from a 26-foot pleasure craft found sinking off Cowan Point, Bowen Island. The coast guard cutter Mallard towed the vessel to Horseshoe Bay.

Two Victoria couples and a young boy managed to make it to safety Monday afternoon after their 23-foot pleasure craft developed engine trouble.

Mr. and Mrs. L. de Wolfe, Mr. and Mrs. A. de Wolfe and David Wolfe were reported missing after their boat failed to return to Sidney noon Sunday.

After the engine failed their boat drifted to Roche Harbor on San Juan Island, ending a search in which the Canadian coast guard cutter Ready and an American coast guard cutter took part.

OUTBOARD INBOARD

A Saanich fisherman was taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital Monday after his 65-horse power motor flipped into his boat as he was heading towards shore.

Langford firemen said Jack Handysides, of 4280 Glanford, caught his limit fishing in Becher Bay and was heading in when his boat hit a log. The motor flipped in the boat, crashing through the transom.

Handysides received cuts to both legs and feet. The 16-foot boat was towed to shore by a passing fisherman. Handysides was treated at Royal Jubilee and released.

Victoria Likes To Tango

They banned it in Winnipeg — but in Victoria they're coming out in droves to see Last Tango in Paris.

City police have received no complaints about the movie since it opened last Friday at the Odeon Theatre where manager Jack Armstrong reports attendance has been good.

He admits Harry in Your Pocket — a comedy filmed in part in Victoria and showing at the same theatre — is doing better than Last Tango. And occasionally some patrons walk out of Last Tango. But no one has objected to the film being shown.

Meanwhile in Winnipeg, where the film was seized by police, a charge against Odeon Theatres Canada Ltd. for showing Last Tango, allegedly an obscene film, has been withdrawn by the Crown.

Saanich First to Back Royal Theatre Purchase

Saanich has become the first municipality to say it is willing to pay its share of the $250,000 purchase of tre Royal Theatre.

The decision to take part in the transaction was made at a special meeting Monday night.

Mayor Hugh Curtis said today, "Saanich is prepared to take part in the Royal Theatre purchase with certain provisos."

He said the first of these would be that the cost be shared on the usual inter-municipal cost-sharing formula — 50 per cent per capita and 50 per cent assessment.

"Saanich will recommend that the theatre be managed by a commission with councils and community represented," he added.

Curtis said his council recommended that the initial agreement "might well be for a five-year period."

He stressed: "Some provision should be made that any participating municipality after five years could withdraw with one year's notice."

Stating that a report on the buikding by the fire marshal was expected "momentarily," Curtis said that Saanich's decision to go ahead is dependent on the report being favorable.

Victoria council has, in a caucus meeting, agreed in principle to pay its share of the purchase, depending on what the other Greater Victoria municipalities decide.

The purchase of the theatre is on the agenda of this afternoon's meeting of the Greater Victoria Intermunicipal Committee. Should the other municipalities agree to go ahead the city is expected to ratify its participation at a regular council meeting.

Compassion Bends Bylaw

Compassion, rather than conformation to a bylaw, was opted by Saanich council Monday when faced with an application of an elderly citizen who wants to be self-sufficient rather than go on welfare.

The 61-year-old McKenzie resident wants permission to have a greenhouse built on her property and grow vegetables for sale in order to keep herself and her mother, who is 95.

"Mrs. — is very reluctant to apply for welfare benefits," contractor M. P. Paine wrote council, "She feels very strongly that she would rather be of service to the community and earn as much as possible rather than receive assistance from others."

Paine said the applicant did not propose to put a stand on the street but would sell the produce from her large backyard.

Municipal planner Tom Loney pointed out that the municipality did not have authority to approve retail sales from residentially-zoned property.

Ald. Leslie Passmore said, "I suggest that Mr. Paine gets his permit and go ahead and build the greenhouse."

Ald Edith Gunning, noting she had seen small fruit stands in other areas on McKenzie, suggested the application should receive further study.

It will be dealt with at the next meeting of the municipal planning committee.

Police Find Hitch-Hiker

Sidney RCMP have located a young woman hitch-hiker who was a passenger in a car that crashed on Patricia Bay Highway Saturday night killing Peter Maude, 22, of 2040 White Birch, Sidney.

Police were unable to release her name and say only she was found Monday on one of the Gulf Islands.

Police say the young woman hitched a ride to the B.C. Ferries in a car driven by Joseph Iverson, 18, of Verdier Avenue, Brentwood Bay. Shortly before 7 p.m. the car went out of control near the Wains-MacDonald Park intersection and crashed into the highway divider.

Maude, a passenger, was thrown out and dragged under the car about 100 feet.

U.S. Orders Fuel Curbs

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon today ordered a mandatory allocation program for home heating oil and propane in an effort to soften the impact of threatened winter shortages.

White House energy adviser, John Love, said the mandatory system of allocating propane under a priority program would become effective immediately.

Detailed regulations affecting heating oil will be placed into effect in the near future, Love said. Other administration officials said they would take effect in a week or two.

It was clear the U.S. "will experience some fuel shortages this winter and perhaps over the next few years," Love said.

In other energy news, four major U.S. oil companies have raised their wholesale gasoline prices since Friday and other firms are expected to follow suit this week.

Under the Cost of Living Council's Phase 4 guidelines released last Friday, there are no provisions to let dealers include the increases in their retail prices.

Wayne Bowlby, president of the Oregon Gasoline Dealers Association, said the increases wipe out gains made by dealers Friday.

In some cases, he said, dealers are making less profit per gallon than they were before Friday's new guidelines.

Shell Oil announced a two-tenths of a cent boost dated 12:01 a.m. Sept. 29, one minute too late for the dealers to pass it on to the consumer.

"That wasn't even subtle," a Shell station owner said. "They just waited for the CLC ruling to go into effect, then gobbled up the profit margin."

Meanwhile, talks of a nation-wide protest against the freeze on gasoline prices spread among filling-station operators in the U.S. today, with half the stations in Houston, Tex., closed Monday and more than a thousand on New York's Long Island expected to do the same in the next few days.

In Los Angeles, organizers of a mass shutdown of southern California gas stations predicted that from 65 to 90 per cent of the area's dealers will join the protest by taking an indefinite "vacation" beginning Friday.

"The basic gripe is that these men can't stay in business under the controls that presently exist under Phase IV," said Stanley Arnold, attorney for the Gasoline Retailers Association of Southern California.

B.C. Fed Blasts New Labor Code

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

An entirely new structure for the labor-management process in British Columbia, including establishment of an all-powerful new Labor Relations Board, is contained in legislation introduced Monday by Labor Minister Bill King.

King said this morning his target date for proclamation of Bill 11 is Jan. 1, 1974 at the latest, at which time all sections will be proclaimed.

The legislation repeals the former Trade Unions Act, the Mediation Services Act and the Labor Relations Act and sets up the new Labor Relations Board as a "labor court," with exclusive jurisdiction over almost all aspects of labor-management relations.

The new board, a 10-man body composed of a chairman, three vice-chairmen and three representatives each from labor and management, is to have powers never before bestowed on any single agency in the B.C. industrial relations process.

There is no provision for appeal of the board's decisions and actions except to a new provincial labor ombudsman, who has power to recommend.

The basic framework in which labor-management negotiations take place in B.C. remains substantially unchanged. There are, however, a number of significant changes to some principal concepts under which trade unions and employers operate.

These include provision of an exemption clause in union contracts which will allow individuals to opt out of unions on religious grounds but still pay dues to the union.

There is also some restricting of picketing practices but a struck union's competitors may now be picketed and more "informational" picketing will be allowed.

Under the new legislation, which is called the Labor Code of British Columbia Act (Bill 11), a certification vote is to be held among a group of employees if requested by 35 per cent of the employees. Fifty per cent plus one of the employees must vote for certification before a bargaining unit is established. Previously, a majority was needed just to stage a vote.

Bill 11 empowers the minister of labor to impose a binding collective agreement on any union or employer which refuses to bargain in good faith. The agreement can be put into effect for as long as a year.

Bargaining between established bargaining units and employers must start no later than 60 days prior to the expiry of the agreement in force between the two parties, and can commence as early as four months prior to expiry if either side wishes.

Injunctions obtained from courts of law to stop illegal strike action and picketing will in future be obtainable only from the Labor Relations Board itself.

All contracts will be required to contain provisions guaranteeing employee secu-

LAW PROFESSOR TO HEAD BOARD

Paul Weiler, a 34-year-old professor at Osgoode Hall Law School in Toronto, has been appointed to a five-year term as chairman of the new Labor Relations Board.

The appointment was approved by the cabinet this morning and announced by Labor Minister Bill King, who described Weiler as having "a wealth of experience in labor affairs."

The law professor, who will receive $39,000 a year as chairman of the board, has chaired more than 200 arbitrations both for the province of Ontario and a number of private companies.

Ed Peck, president of the Towboat Industrial Relations Association, will be chief administrative officer of the board as vice-chairman. His salary will be $38,000.

King said Peck, a 49-year-old native Victorian, "has a background of 20 years' experience in industrial and labor relations in the province, in both public and private industry, and federal and provincial jurisdictions."

Formerly manager of labor relations for B.C. Hydro, Peck has acted as a mediator in private disputes and as a government-appointed conciliator.

Two other vice-chairmen, who will receive $33,000 a year for their five-year terms, are Jack Moore, former regional president of the Inter-

HIGHLIGHTS

The new Labor Code of British Columbia Act (Bill 11), introduced in the legislature Monday features:

New Labor Relations Board established, with extremely wide discretionary powers covering all major areas of labor-management relations.

Negotiations for new agreement must start at least 60 days prior to expiry of old contract.

Only 35 per cent approval of employee group (down from 50 plus one) needed to stage certification vote.

All contracts must have "technological change" provisions.

Exemptions from unions on religious grounds will be allowed.

Labor board empowered to impose first collective agreement on employer or union refusing to bargain in good faith.

Provincial labor ombudsman established to handle complaints from employers and unions as well as individuals.

Powers of arbitration boards increased and boards made less accountable to courts.

Informational picketing allowed at any time, but other picketing somewhat restricted.

Picketing of competitors of struck employer allowed if competitor gains from work stoppage.

Employers are forbidden to "use, or authorize or permit the use of" professional strikebreakers.

Wipes out a controversial section of the current Labor Relations Act which made it illegal for unions to contribute money for political parties or candidates.

Makes null and void any contract which discriminates against any person contrary to the Human Rights Act. This will wipe out any union contract with discriminatory pay rates as between men and women.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly says she will announce next spring a policy aimed as combatting rising costs for students.

Premier Barrett accuses CP Rail and Canadian National Railways of not co-operating with B.C. Railways in the supply of rail cars and suggests he may take action.

All three opposition parties criticized the proposed Farm Income Assurance Act as too vague, too all-encompassing and too powerful.

All stories on Page 21.

Trade union leaders were more dissatisfied than anyone today with the proposed B.C. labor code and warned unless it is changed it "will cause increased labor unrest."

A preliminary analysis prepared by the B.C. Federation of Labor and parent Canadian Labor Congress described a number of provisions as "detrimental to the working people" in the province.

The unionists said at a press conference in Vancouver the New Democratic Party government they helped elect "has departed drastically" from NDP policies in its 1972 election platform.

According to Ray Haynes, federation secretary-treasurer, the unionists will now start working with "people in the NDP who are close enough to labor" to get the code overhauled.

On the employers' side, leaders in the construction industry were also highly critical but employers generally were maintaining a cool reaction.

Charles Connaghan, president of Construction Labor Relations Association, said the code will create "nothing but chaos" in his industry and described it as "gigantic step backwards."

But William Hamilton, president of the Employers' Council of B.C., of which CLRA is a member, told another press conference employers generally will take a positive approach to the legislation.

Hamilton said employers have reservations about some sections and are completely opposed to others, but will make representations for changes with the view that, if the legislation can be used to minimize strikes and lockouts, "we will be happy."

The federation objected to the government appointing none of the people it had recommended for executive positions in the labor setup.

"The majority of these positions will be filled by people with no background in the trade union movement, nor any record of assisting the aspirations of working people," said their preliminary analysis.

"So the government is proposing to place the fate of working people in the hands of a (labor relations) board dominated by professional people and employer representatives."

Unless there are substantial amendments, the trade union leaders recommended the proposed code be referred to the legislature's standing committee on labor "to enable the labor movement to make clear the potentially-disastrous implications of many sections."

Haynes was chief spokesman at the labor press conference, flanked by federation vice-president Len Guy of the Typographical Union, Mike Parr of the Operating Engineers and William Stewart of the Marine-Boilermakers.

The union leaders criticized provisions to assist the organizing of the unorganized on grounds they still will omit fishermen, agricultural workers and licensed professionals from union certification, make organizational

Nixon 'Backed' Ellsberg Raid

Times News Services

LOS ANGELES — President Nixon "specifically approved" a venture to the west coast by Howard Hunt and Gordon Liddy to develop information on Daniel Ellsberg and the Pentagon Papers leak according to former White House domestic chief John Ehrlichman.

He did not, however, say that the president authorized the burgling of the office of Ellsberg's analyst.

Ehrlichman testified last June before the Los Angeles County grand jury, which last month returned an indictment charging him with perjury and conspiracy in connection with the break-in at the psychiatrist's Beverly Hills office. That testimony, along with that of more than two dozen other witnesses, was made public Monday.

While the 727-page transcript revealed nothing dramatically new, it did shed some light on the role of the so-called "plumbers unit," the secret White House investigative team created by Nixon in the summer of 1971, and its relationship with the president.

Ehrlichman was asked: "Did you approve that recommendation to investigate Ellsberg?"

"I believe the recommendation was discussed specifically with the president, before it was approved."

"By you?"

"No, I — as I say, I believe he he specifically approved it. And it's my recollection that he either discussed it with — well, I know he discussed it with Mr. Hoover."

"What was your understanding," the questioning continued, "of the investigative methods to be used by Mr. Hunt and Liddy during the course of their investigations?"

"Only that they were to conduct themselves in such a fashion that it did not apper that the White House was directly involved in the act of investigation."

Defeated General Jailed

SAIGON (Reuter) — The Saigon military court for the first time has passed sentence on a general for a military defeat.

The court sentenced Brig-Gen. Yu Van Giai today to five years hard labor for his part in the fall of Quang Tri in May last year. He was also stripped of his rank and 30 medals.

The court, comprised of a civilian president and four generals, found him guilty of abandoning his post in the face of the enemy and of disobeying the orders of his superiors.

Gen. Giai, 39, commanded the South Vietnamese force which captured Tchépone in Laos in the first ground strike at the Ho Chi Minh trail network in 1971.

He was then generally considered the most aggressive of South Vietnam's young battlefield commanders and was promoted to command the newly formed Third Division which was decimated at Quang Tri in last year's offensive.

NEW BEEF SPIRAL FEARED

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A continent-wide beef shortage this winter will send prices soaring, possibly even beyond the peak levels of August, warns Bruce Whyte, general manager of the British Columbia Livestock Producers Co-operative Association.

Market uncertainties and the high costs of raising beef have resulted in reduced production and the industry is not expanding to meet growing demands, Whyte said Monday.

"At the present level of return, many beef producers and finishing operations consider expansion a bad investment," he said.

U.K. Retreats In Cod War

LONDON (AP)—Britain ordered its naval shield of three frigates and three tugs out of Iceland's disputed 50-mile fishing zone today.

The move was disclosed after Prime Minister Heath told the Icelandic government in a note that the British warships and tugs would be out of the disputed area by Wednesday.

"The withdrawal will be made on the assumption that the Icelandic authorities will not take any measures against British trawlers fishing, or which have fished, in the di puted area," Heath told Icelandic Prime Minister Olafur Joahannesson.

"The navy and the tugs will return if this assumption proves to be wrong."

Heath at the same time invited Johannesson to London for talks on achieving a live-and-let-live arrangement in the zone.

Iceland extended its limits to 50 from 12 miles 13 months ago and met British and other international protests.

Heath sent his letter about 12 hours before the expiry of Iceland's ultimatum to this country demanding a pull-out of the naval shield by midnight Tuesday night.

Heath told Johannessen he trusted that the Reykjavik government, in the light of the British decision, will maintain its diplomatic ties.

LIFE TERM FOR HEROIN

TORONTO (CP) — Ng Yuen Hing, a 37-year-old cook from New York City, was sentenced Monday to life imprisonment for trafficking in 25 pounds of heroin worth $4 million on the illegal market.

Federal prosecutor David Scott, who had called for a life sentence, said he did so because Ng was not an addict but dealt in drugs solely for the money.

Cowichan Fishing Allowed

Environment Minister Jack Davis said from Vancouver today he has reached a tentative understanding with the Cowichan Band council allowing them up to 5,000 salmon from the Cowichan River runs.

Davis met the council and other Indian representatives in Duncan Monday night and he said today he sees the main accomplishment as agreement on the principle of escapement — assuring enough salmon reach spawning beds to assure future runs.

If taking of salmon from the river by Indians is judged to be threatening escapement of any species, the band will have the alternative of making up the needed quota from the commercial fishery, such as through hiring a seiner.

Davis said the meeting did not deal in detail with means of harvesting fish from the river.

Ottawa Backs B.C. Gas Policy

Federal Energy Minister Donald Macdonald says he agrees in principle with the British Columbia government that prices for natural gas should be greatly increased.

He said a recommendation by the British Columbia Energy Commission that prices be raised from 32 cents per thousand cubic feet to 58 cents is similar to federal policy.

"Prices for export should be increased and indeed that was the substance of the government's change in the National Energy Board regulations back in 1970, so I have no argument on it," he said in an interview in Victoria.

The federal energy minister said natural gas should only be exported at prices similar to other forms of energy.

The federal minister said it was clearly within provincial jurisdiction to establish a Crown agency to control gas production at the wellhead and to direct Westcoast Transmission Company to become a common carrier.

In Vancouver, Robert Kadiec, president of Inland Natural Gas, said the predicted natural gas shortage could have disastrous consequences for industries in the B.C. interior this winter.

He said the shortage could result in lay-offs at some plants.

"The reaction voiced by some of our customers has so far ranged from 'serious' to 'disastrous'," Kadiec said.

"Our customers are all extremely vulnerable to the shortage because, as Interior operations, they have no access to alternate fuels," Kadiec said.

Both Sides Rap Changes

picketing still illegal, and ignore proposed tightening up of restrictions on "company unions."

They objected to the "sweeping powers" to be granted the new 10-member labor board, making the powers of the now defunct B.C. Mediation Commission "pale in comparison."

Referring to union choice of voluntary arbitration in fire, police and hospital contract disputes, Fred (Whitey) Severson, past president of the Victoria City Firefighters Union and second vice-president of the union's B.C. association, said "it is very fair legislation."

He said it is the type of legislation he had been hoping for and arbitration for essential services, particularly firefighters, "has been the fairest way to settle a dispute."

"I think it will be received very happily by the B.C. body," he said.

Mrs. Catherine Farrar, executive director of Health Sciences Association of B.C., representing para-medical personnel, said she is "extremely pleased" with the proposed legislation.

"We feel the strike weapon is not a realistic dispute-settling tool in hospitals," she said, adding that her union has a no-strike provision in its constitution.

She also welcomed the new code establishing that supervisory personnel are within a trade union bargaining unit because "there is a definite need for their protection."

A spokesman for the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. said it was difficult to comment without seeing the bill, but observed that the association voluntarily went before the B.C. Mediation Commission two years ago "but we have stood by the right-to-strike principle. What will happen in the future I can't say."

Duncan Bradford, executive secretary of the B.C. Hospitals Association, which bargains on behalf of hospitals, said while he hasn't studied the bill "I'm hopeful some good will come of it."

The bill appeared to be trying to offer a way for employees in essential industries to steer clear of strikes "and this is a good approach."

He was concerned that management doesn't have the same opportunity of choosing voluntary arbitration as the unions do.

A spokesman for the Hospital Employees Union said there is no response yet from the union to the bill.

Initial reaction from opposition spokesmen to the new labor code was generally critical.

Liberal leader David Anderson said a clause allowing a person with strong religious beliefs not to join a union was a "phony concession" because that person would still be required to pay dues.

That person, he said, is placed in the position of having to support an institution he opposes.

The removal of a court's right to issue injunctions, Anderson added, was simply the transfer of powers and the creation of a "labor court."

And giving the 10-man board the right to draw up a first contract on behalf of certified union workers who can't reach a collective agreement with management, opened up a "minefield of problems," he said.

"It would involve the wisdom of Solomon."

Acting Conservative leader Dr. G. Scott Wallace was most pessimistic about the legislation which he described as "not only one of the most complex but also one of the most important bills to be introduced in the four years I've been in provincial politics."

"On this rides the whole fate of labor relations in the province."

Wallace's key concern was the sweeping power that would be granted to the labor relations board, and the apparent lack of appeal mechanisms from its decisions.

He questioned the constitutionality of such a strong, publicly-appointed group taking over the judicial function of issuing injunctions.

"As a layman, the thought that runs through my mind is, do we have protection if a government chooses to give that much power to a board of appointed people?"

Wallace predicted the board would be buried under the sheer volume of work it would have to cope with under the new code.

Jim Chabot, Social Credit House leader, shared Anderson's views on the religious belief clause, but said there are no more than 500 people in B.C. who have conscientious objections to trade unions.

Chabot singled out the clause allowing unions, under certain conditions, to bargain for employees of independent contractors as his main worry. He said this will most affect contractors in the logging industry.

"It appears clear to me that the day of the independent logger contractor will disappear in the not-too-distant future."

The Social Credit member said further that if unions in essential services (firemen, police and hospitals) can turn to binding arbitration to solve contract problems, "employers should have an equal right."

New Labor Board Has Wide Range

rity with regard to technological changes. If contracts do not provide such guarantees, the minister of labor can impose them.

King, at a press conference shortly after Bill 11 was introduced, said his three-man advisory committee had studied labor legislation used by Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and the federal government. The new Labor Relations Board is similar to that in Ontario, he said.

King said the main thrust of the legislation is to provide the new board with jurisdiction to "get at the causes of disputes rather than deal with them in just a punitive way, as the courts have done in the past."

To accomplish this, almost all access to the legal process has been eliminated from labor-management relations.

One section stipulates that the Labor Relations Board is to have "exclusive jurisdiction to determine the extent of its jurisdiction . . . or to determine any fact or question of law that is necessary to establish its jurisdiction."

Another specifies that any decision, order or ruling of the board is "final and conclusive and is not open to question or review in any court . . ."

The only appeal of board decisions is to the board itself.

The legislation provides for the appointment by the cabinet of a labor ombudsman for a term of five years, but the ombudsman, although having power to investigate any complaint raised against the board, an employer, union or labor department employee, is not able to enforce his recommendations only to report them to the labor minister, legislature or public.

The regulation of all strikes, lockouts and picket activities is to be taken over by the Labor Relations Board, which can decide whether or not such activities are damaging any individual or group or should be stopped by order.

The present requirement of 72 hours' strike and lockout notice remains in the new legislation as do penalties for failing to comply with the act, which are fines of $1,000 for individuals and $10,000 for employers or unions.

A significant refinement of existing legislation moves the burden of proof of an unfair labor practice from the employee to the employer.

This means that it will now be up to individual employer to prove to the Labor Relations Board that he had good cause to discharge, suspend, transfer, lay off or otherwise discipline an employee if the employee lodges a complaint with the board.

The definition of unfair labor practices is so considerably expanded in the new legislation, including stipulation that professional strike-breakers and groups of strike-breakers cannot be used by employers.

Another important innovation in Bill 11 is the provision of a new method which the Labor Relations Board and labor minister can use to avert strike action and work stoppages before contracts expire.

This would be through the newly-created position of "special officers" who will have the power to arbitrate disputes themselves and impose binding orders on parties in a dispute.

There is provision in the legislation for certain workers in essential services, including policemen, firefighters and hospital workers, to choose binding arbitration as a means of settling a contract dispute, regardless of the wishes of their management group.

King said this provision is a realistic alternative to strike action, which remains available to these workers if they choose to use it.

King also said individuals will not be able to sue for civil damages suffered as a result of picketing or strike action unless all channels of appeal to the Labor Relations Board are exhausted.

Similarly, picketers operating within the law cannot be sued for restricting access to an individual's property or for interfering with "contractural relations."

Informational picketing is to be allowed by Bill 11 at any time by any union.

However, there is to be a restriction on the type of picketing a union may do in an attempt to gain support for its strike actions.

Picketing will not be allowed at a place where a collective agreement is in effect and the board prohibits it. But picketing will be allowed at the place of business of those employers considered "allies" of the struck employer.

The bill defines "allies" as those persons who stand to gain in business as a result of a strike or lockout and who perform work, supply goods or furnish services of a kind that would normally be done by the employer, unless he is able to prove the contrary.

The section specifying that every collective agreement signed in the province must contain provisions for arbitration of disputes arising from technological changes brought in by the employer says these provisions may include notice by an employer of intention to introduce technological changes, opportunities for retraining or transfer of employees and severance pay for employees displaced by the technological change.

If an arbitration board is called in to arbitrate a dispute arising from a technological change, the arbitration board may order a delay of up to 90 days for the change or reinstatement and compensation to any employee displaced by the change.

The religious exemption clause contained in Bill 11 is a type of Rand Formula provision for religious purposes. It stipulates that persons who are able to convince the Labor Relations Board that they should not have to belong to a labor union for religious reasons will pay the union the equivalent of dues but will not take part in any union business.

This is the type of conscience clause widely expected to be introduced and one to which the labor movement has already expressed its opposition, saying it will lead to an erosion of the unions' position in employee representation.

The Labor Relations Board is to be appointed by order-in-council. The chairman, however, cannot be removed from his position, during the five years of his term of appointment, except by an act passed by the legislature.

The board will be able to use a system of panels, several of which will be able to make decisions on different matters simultaneously. A panel is to consist of, in some cases, the chairman or one of the vice-chairmen only, and in other cases a vice-chairman along with an equal number of labor and management appointees.

An example of the wide powers granted the board under Bill 11 is a section which stipulates that the board has exclusive jurisdiction over "communication of information or opinion in a labor dispute by speech, writing or any other means of communication" which could conceivably include statements of libel and slander.

Under the legislation, the powers of boards of arbitration are increased and control by the courts over their decisions is restricted.

And again, the powers of the Labor Relations Board are increased, to the extent that in the event the board decides that a delay has occurred in the settling of a difference between two sides in a dispute, it may order that the difference be arbitrated by a board or a special officer.

When an application for certification of a group of employees is being processed, no strikes or lockouts affecting the employees will be allowed and the employer will not be able to increase or decrease rates of pay or change working conditions.

Another power of the new board will be to order the consolidation of several unions into a joint council if it considers this "necessary or advisable" or when one or more unions applies for such consolidation.

Moore, 49, first became president of the IWA in 1962 and was re-elected six times. He also served as first vice-president of the B.C. Federation of Labor.

Morrison, 36, a graduate of Osgoode Hall, has practiced law in three provinces and served as assistant city prosecutor in Vancouver before her recent appointment as provincial judge.

King said all the appointments are effective immediately.

They are officially the old Labor Relations Board he said, so that the four can begin organizational work for the new board before it is established when the act is proclaimed.

King said he hopes the proclamation will be made by the beginning of next year.

Six other board members, three to be nominated by labor groups in the province and three by employer representatives, have not been appointed yet.

the weather

The ridge of high pressure over Southern and Central B.C. promises generally sunny weather for most districts today and Wednesday. However a series of weak weather systems moving across the Charlottes will produce occasional rain or drizzle over the North Coast. Afternoon temperatures will show a warming trend but frost will be general in the Interior tonight.

U.S. Orders Fuel Curbs

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon today ordered a mandatory allocation program for home heating oil and propane in an effort to soften the impact of threatened winter shortages.

White House energy adviser, John Love, said the mandatory system of allocating propane under a priority program would become effective immediately.

Detailed regulations affecting heating oil will be placed into effect in the near future, Love said. Other administration officials said they would take effect in a week or two.

It was clear the U.S. "will experience some fuel shortages this winter and perhaps over the next few years," Love said.

In other energy news, four major U.S. oil companies have raised their wholesale gasoline prices since Friday and other firms are expected to follow suit this week.

Under the Cost of Living Council's Phase 4 guidelines released last Friday, there are no provisions to let dealers include the increases in their retail prices.

Wayne Bowlby, president of the Oregon Gasoline Dealers Association, said the increases wipe out gains made by dealers Friday.

In some cases, he said, dealers are making less profit per gallon than they were before Friday's new guidelines.

Atlantic Richfield raised its wholesale price 1½ cents a gallon Monday.

Shell Oil announced a two-tenths of a cent boost dated 12:01 a.m. Sept. 29, one minute too late for the dealers to pass it on to the consumer.

"That wasn't even subtle," a Shell station owner said. "They just waited for the CLC ruling to go into effect, then gobbled up the profit margin."

Meanwhile, talks of a nation-wide protest against the freeze on gasoline prices spread among filling-station operators in the U.S. today, with half the stations in Houston, Tex., closed Monday and more than a thousand on New York's Long Island expected to do the same in the next few days.

In Los Angeles, organizers of a mass shutdown of southern California gas stations predicted that from 65 to 90 per cent of the area's dealers will join the protest by taking an indefinite "vacation" beginning Friday.

"The basic gripe is that these men can't stay in business under the controls that presently exist under Phase IV," said Stanley Arnold, attorney for the Gasoline Retailers Association of Southern California.

B.C. Fed Blasts New Labor Code

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

An entirely new structure for the labor-management process in British Columbia, including establishment of an all-powerful new Labor Relations Board, is contained in legislation introduced Monday by Labor Minister Bill King.

King said this morning his target date for proclamation of Bill 11 is Jan. 1, 1974 at the latest, at which time all sections will be proclaimed.

The legislation repeals the former Trade Unions Act, the Mediation Services Act and the Labor Relations Act and sets up the new Labor Relations Board — as a "labor court," with exclusive jurisdiction over almost all aspects of labor-management relations.

The new board, a 10-man body composed of a chairman, three vice-chairmen and three representatives each from labor and management, is to have powers never before bestowed on any single agency in the B.C. industrial relations process.

There is no provision for appeal of the board's decisions and actions except to a new provincial labor ombudsman, who has power to recommend.

The basic framework in which labor-management negotiations take place in B.C. remains substantially unchanged. There are, however, a number of significant changes to some principal concepts under which trade unions and employers operate.

These include provision of an exemption clause in union contracts which will allow individuals to opt out of unions on religious grounds but still pay dues to the union.

There is also some restricting of picketing practices but a struck union's competitors may now be picketed and more "informational" picketing will be allowed.

Under the new legislation, which is called the Labor Code of British Columbia Act (Bill 11), a certification vote is to be held among a group of employees if requested by 35 per cent of the employees. Fifty per cent plus one of the employees must vote for certification before a bargaining unit is established. Previously, a majority was needed just to stage a vote.

Bill 11 empowers the minister of labor to impose a binding collective agreement on any union or employer which refuses to bargain in good faith. The agreement can be put into effect for as long as a year.

Bargaining between established bargaining units and employers must start no later than 60 days prior to the expiry of the agreement in force between the two parties, and can commence as early as four months prior to expiry if either side wishes.

Injunctions obtained from courts of law to stop illegal strike action and picketing will in future be obtainable only from the Labor Relations Board itself.

All contracts will be required to contain provisions guaranteeing employee secu-

LAW PROFESSOR TO HEAD BOARD

Paul Weiler, a 34-year-old professor at Osgoode Hall Law School in Toronto, has been appointed to a five-year term as chairman of the new Labor Relations Board.

The appointment was approved by the cabinet this morning and announced by Labor Minister Bill King, who described Weiler as having "a wealth of experience in labor affairs."

The law professor, who will receive $39,000 a year as chairman of the board, has chaired more than 200 arbitrations both for the province of Ontario and a number of private companies.

Ed Peck, president of the Towboat Industrial Relations Association, will be chief administrative officer of the board as vice-chairman. His salary will be $38,000.

King said Peck, a 49-year-old native Victorian, "has a background of 20 years' experience in industrial and labor relations in the province, in both public and private industry, and federal and provincial jurisdictions."

Formerly manager of labor relations for B.C. Hydro, Peck has acted as a mediator in private disputes and as a government-appointed conciliator.

Two other vice-chairmen, who will receive $33,000 a year for their five-year terms, are Jack Moore, former regional president of the Inter-

HIGHLIGHTS

The new Labor Code of British Columbia Act (Bill 11), introduced in the legislature Monday features:

New Labor Relations Board established, with extremely wide discretionary powers covering all major areas of labor-management relations.

Negotiations for new agreement must start at least 60 days prior to expiry of old contract.

Only 35 per cent approval of employee group (down from 50 plus one) needed to stage certification vote.

All contracts must have "technological change" provisions.

Exemptions from unions on religious grounds will be allowed.

Labor board empowered to impose first collective agreement on employer or union refusing to bargain in good faith.

Provincial labor ombudsman established to handle complaints from employers and unions as well as individuals.

Powers of arbitration boards increased and boards made less accountable to courts.

Informational picketing allowed at any time, but other picketing somewhat restricted.

Picketing of competitors of struck employer allowed if competitor gains from work stoppage.

Employers are forbidden to "use, or authorize or permit the use of" professional strikebreakers.

Wipes out a controversial section of the current Labor Relations Act which made it illegal for unions to contribute money for political parties or candidates.

Makes null and void any contract which discriminates against any person contrary to the Human Rights Act. This will wipe out any union contract with discriminatory pay rates as between men and women.

Trade union leaders were more dissatisfied than anyone today with the proposed B.C. labor code and warned unless it is changed it "will cause increased labor unrest."

A preliminary analysis prepared by the B.C. Federation of Labor and parent Canadian Labor Congress described a number of provisions as "detrimental to the working people" in the province.

The unionists said at a press conference in Vancouver the New Democratic Party government they helped elect "has departed drastically" from NDP policies in its 1972 election platform.

According to Ray Haynes, federation secretary-treasurer, the unionists will now start working with "people in the NDP who are close enough to labor" to get the code overhauled.

On the employers' side, leaders in the construction industry were also highly critical but employers generally were maintaining a cool reaction.

Charles Connaghan, president of Construction Labor Relations Association, said the code will create "nothing but chaos" in his industry and described it as "gigantic step backwards."

But William Hamilton, president of the Employers' Council of B.C., of which CLRA is a member, told another press conference employers generally will take a positive approach to the legislation.

Hamilton said employers have reservations about some sections and are completely opposed to others, but will make representations for changes with the view that, if the legislation can be used to minimize strikes and lockouts, "we will be happy."

The federation objected to the government appointing none of the people it had recommended for executive positions in the labor setup.

"The majority of these positions will be filled by people with no background in the trade union movement, nor any record of assisting the aspirations of working people," said their preliminary analysis.

"So the government is proposing to place the fate of working people in the hands of a (labor relations) board dominated by professional people and employer representatives."

Unless there are substantial amendments, the trade union leaders recommended the proposed code be referred to the legislature's standing committee on labor "to enable the labor movement to make clear the potentially-disastrous implications of many sections."

Haynes was chief spokesman at the labor press conference, flanked by federation vice-president Len Guy of the Typographical Union, Mike Parr of the Operating Engineers and William Stewart of the Marine-Boilermakers.

The union leaders criticized provisions to assist the organizing of the unorganized on grounds they still will omit fishermen, agricultural workers and licensed professionals from union certification, make organizational

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — Two U.S. Airlines have received letters demanding they donate $500,000 each to specified charities or face harassment of passengers and attacks on their offices here. Police are investigating the letter sent to Braniff and Pan American.

Nixon 'Backed' Ellsberg Raid

Times News Services

LOS ANGELES — President Nixon "specificially approved" a venture to the west coast by Howard Hunt and Gordon Liddy to develop information on Daniel Ellsberg and the Pentagon Papers leak according to former White House domestic chief John Ehrlichman.

He did not, however, say that the president authorized the burgling of the office of Ellsberg's analyst.

Ehrlichman testified last June before the Los Angeles County grand jury, which last month returned an indictment charging him with perjury and conspiracy in connection with the break-in at the psychiatrist's Beverly Hills office. That testimony, along with that of more than two dozen other witnesses, was made public Monday.

While the 727-page transcript revealed nothing dramatically new, it did shed some light on the role of the so-called "plumbers unit," the secret White House investigative team created by Nixon in the summer of 1971, and its relationship with the president.

Ehrlichman was asked: "Did you approve that recommendation to investigate Ellsberg?"

"I believe the recommendation was discussed specifically with the president, before it was approved."

"By you?"

"No, I — as I say, I believe he — he specifically approved it. And it's my recollection that he either discussed it with — well, I know he discussed it with Mr. Hoover."

"What was your understanding," the questioning continued, "of the investigative methods to be used by Mr. Hunt and Liddy during the course of their investigations?"

"Only that they were to conduct themselves in such a fashion that it did not apper that the White House was directly involved in the act of investigation."

Defeated General Jailed

SAIGON (Reuter) — The Saigon military court for the first time has passed sentence on a general for a military defeat.

The court sentenced Brig-Gen. Yu Van Giai today to five years hard labor for his part in the fall of Quang Tri in May last year. He was also stripped of his rank and 30 medals.

The court, comprised of a civilian president and four generals, found him guilty of abandoning his post in the face of the enemy and of disobeying the orders of his superiors.

Gen. Giai, 39, commanded the South Vietnamese force which captured Tchepone in Laos in the first ground strike at the Ho Chi Minh trail network in 1971.

He was then generally considered the most aggressive of South Vietnam's young battlefield commanders and was promoted to command the newly formed Third Division which was decimated at Quang Tri in last year's offensive.

NEW BEEF SPIRAL FEARED

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A continent-wide beef shortage this winter will send prices soaring, possibly even beyond the peak levels of August, warns Bruce Whyte, general manager of the British Columbia Livestock Producers Co-operative Association.

Market uncertainties and the high costs of raising beef have resulted in reduced production and the industry is not expanding to meet growing demands, Whyte said Monday.

"At the present level of return, many beef producers and finishing operations consider expansion a bad investment," he said.

U.K. Retreats In Cod War

LONDON (AP) — Britain ordered its naval shield of three frigates and three tugs out of Iceland's disputed 50-mile fishing zone today.

The move was disclosed after Prime Minister Heath told the Icelandic government in a note that the British warships and tugs would be out of the disputed area by Wednesday.

"The withdrawal will be made on the assumption that the Icelandic authorities will not take any measures against British trawlers fishing, or which have fished, in the disputed area," Heath told Icelandic Prime Minister Olafur Joahannesson.

"The navy and the tugs will return if this assumption proves to be wrong."

Heath at the same time invited Johannesson to London for talks on achieving a live-and-let-live arrangement in the zone.

Iceland extended its limits to 50 from 12 miles 13 months ago and met British and other international protests.

Heath sent his letter about 12 hours before the expiry of Iceland's ultimatum to this country demanding a pull-out of the naval shield by midnight Tuesday night.

Heath told Johannessen he trusted that the Reykjavik government, in the light of the British decision, will maintain its diplomatic ties.

Cowichan Fishing Allowed

Environment Minister Jack Davis said from Vancouver today he has reached a tentative understanding with the Cowichan Band council allowing them up to 5,000 salmon from the Cowichan River runs.

Davis met the council and other Indian representatives in Duncan Monday night and he said today he sees the main accomplishment as agreement on the principle of escapement — assuring enough salmon reach spawning beds to assure future runs.

If taking of salmon from the river by Indians is judged to be threatening escapement of any species, the band will have the alternative of making up the needed quota from the commercial fishery, such as through hiring a seiner.

Davis said the meeting did not deal in detail with means of harvesting fish from the river.

The Rum-Runners Were Mounties

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (UPI) — A number of Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers have been found guilty of smuggling liquor to Newfoundland from the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Chief Superintendent K. B. M. Fraser said the men were found guilty by a "tribunal of RCMP officers" of offences under the customs act.

Ottawa Backs B.C. Gas Policy

Federal Energy Minister Donald Macdonald says he agrees in principle with the British Columbia government that prices for natural gas should be greatly increased.

He said a recommendation by the British Columbia Energy Commission that prices be raised from 32 cents per thousand cubic feet to 58 cents is similar to federal policy.

"Prices for export should be increased and indeed that was the substance of the government's change in the National Energy Board regulations back in 1970, so I have no argument on it," he said in an interview in Victoria.

The federal energy minister said natural gas should only be exported at prices similar to other forms of energy.

The federal minister said it was clearly within provincial jurisdiction to establish a Crown agency to control gas production at the wellhead and to direct Westcoast Transmission Company to become a common carrier.

In Vancouver, Robert Kadiec, president of Inland Natural Gas, said the predicted natural gas shortage could have disastrous consequences for industries in the B.C. interior this winter.

He said the shortage could result in lay-offs at some plants.

"The reaction voiced by some of our customers has so far ranged from 'serious' to 'disastrous'," Kadiec said.

"Our customers are all extremely vulnerable to the shortage because, as Interior operations, they have no access to alternate fuels," Kadiec said.
